2. ————— *Protection given to answers which a witness is compelled to give—"Compelled to give," Meaning of the words—Indian Oaths Act (X of 1873), s. 14.—S. 132 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) makes a distinction between those cases in which a witness voluntarily answers a question and those in which he is compelled to answer, and gives him a protection in the latter of these cases only. Protection is afforded only to answers which a witness has objected to give or which he has asked to be excused from giving, and which then he has been compelled by the Court to give. Queen v. Gopal Dass, I.L.R., 3 Mad., 721, followed. Per BIRDWOOD, J. (dissenting)—S. 132 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872), read with s. 14 of the Indian Oaths Act (X of 1873), compels a witness to answer criminating questions, and he is protected by the proviso to s. 132 from a criminal prosecution for any offence of which he criminales himself directly or indirectly by his answer, except a prosecution for giving false evidence by such answer. It is not only when a witness asks to be excused from answering a criminating question and his request is refused that he is "compelled to give" the answer within the meaning of the proviso. The compulsion is operative, whether he asks to be excused or gives the answer without so asking. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. GANU SONBA [I. L. R., 12 Bom., 440]*

3. ————— *"Compelled"—Compelling witness to answer questions.—*The word "compelled" in the proviso to s. 132 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) applies only where the Court has compelled a witness to answer a question, and not to a case where the witness has not asked to be excused from answering a question, but gives his answer without any claim to have himself excused. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. MOSS . . . I. L. R., 16 All., 68

4. ————— *and ss. 129, 130, 131.—Compelling witness to answer questions.—*The mere subpoenaing of a witness or ordering him to go into the witness-box does not compel him to give any particular answer or to answer any particular question. The words "shall be compelled to give" in s. 132, Evidence Act, apply to pressure put upon a witness after he is in the box, and when he asks to be excused from answering a question. The wording of ss. 129, 130, 131, 132, and 148, Evidence Act, compared and discussed. MOHAR SHEIKH v. QUEEN-EMPRESS . . . I. L. R., 21 Cal., 392

cl. (3).—Evidence in reply impeaching the credit of a witness.—In a suit by one K claiming (inter alia) a share in a business as heirress of A, her father, the defendant pleading limitation, K, before the close of her case, put in evidence an entry in a Koran to show that she was born in 1279, and in the cross-examination of M, a witness for the defence, put to him a letter purporting to have been written by A to M, supporting K's case. Upon M denying the genuineness of the Koran and of certain words in the letter, it was proposed on behalf of K to give evidence in reply showing that M had made statements to an attorney before the case inconsistent with his evidence, both as to the Koran and the letter. Held that evidence might be given in reply as regards the Koran, but not as regards the letter; no substantive evidence having been given as to the latter before the close of the plaintiff's case. Semble—The expression "which is liable to be contradicted" in s. 155 (3) of the Evidence Act is equivalent to "which is relevant to the issue." KHADJIAN KHANUM v. ARDOOL KURKEM SHERAJI [I. L. R., 17 Cal., 344]

s. 159—Bonds destroyed by fire—Refreshing memory of witness.—The plaints and records in a number of suits upon bonds instituted by the same plaintiff against different persons were destroyed by fire. The suits were re-instituted, and duplicate copies of the plaints were filed. The only evidence of the contents of the bonds, from which the plaints were prepared, consisted of a register kept by the plaintiff's gomastas of the names of the executants of the bonds, the matter in respect of which the bonds had been given, the amounts due thereunder, and the names of the attesting witnesses. From this register the duplicate plaints had been prepared. Held that, though the register was not secondary evidence of the contents of the bonds, yet it was a document which might be referred to by a witness for the purpose of refreshing his memory, under s. 159 of the Evidence Act. *TARUCK NATH MULLICK v. 1. ————— Discretion of Magistrate in examining accused—Evidence insufficient to found charge.—It is a matter of discretion for the Magistrate whether, during the enquiry before him, it is right and proper that the accused should be examined or not. But it is undesirable that the accused should be examined by the Magistrate when he is satisfied that the evidence adduced by the prosecution does not disclose any proper subject of criminal charge against him. IN THE MATTER OF SHAMA SANKAR BISWAS 1 B. L. R., 8 N., 16

2. ————— Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, s. 202.—The discretion of a Magistrate, under s. 202, Code of Criminal Procedure, to ask questions of an accused is entirely unfettered, to ask questions under that section should not be of an inquisitorial nature, and a Magistrate should inform the accused that he is not bound to answer. Answers to questions under that section are admissible in evidence, even if the Magistrate has omitted to warn the accused he need not answer. QUEEN v. DINOO ROY 16 W. R., Cr., 21

3. ————— Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, s. 209—Examination of accused before committal—Discretion of Magistrate.—It is the duty of a Magistrate, before committing accused persons for trial, to examine them for the purpose of enabling them to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against them. The effect of s. 209 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is that it is not left to the discretion of the Magistrate who intends to commit to examine the accused. He is bound to examine them, and if he makes an order of commitment without such examination, the order is irregular. QUEEN-EMPERESS v. PANDARA TEVAN

[1 L. R., 10 Cal., 970]

8. ———— Object of examination of prisoner.—The discretionary power given by law to examine a prisoner should be used to ascertain from him how he may explain facts in evidence appearing against him, not to drive him to make self-criminating statements. EX-PARTE VIRABUDRA GAUD
1 Mad., 199

9. ———— Examination by Sessions Judge—Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, s. 250.—Under s. 250 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the Court may from time to time, at any stage of the case, examine the accused personally; but the Court is not competent to subject the accused to severe cross-examination. The discretion given by the law is not to be used for the purpose of driving the accused to make statements criminating himself, but only for the purpose of ascertaining from the accused how he is able to meet facts standing in evidence against him, so that these facts should not stand against him unexplained. Ex-parte Virabuddra Gaud, 1 Mad., 199, followed. IN THE MATTER OF CHINIBASH GHOSH

10. ———— Examination at preliminary investigation of murder—Criminal Procedure Code, ss. 164, 364.—It is improper to attempt to make an accused person, before any evidence is required, confess his guilt and admit facts that may go to incriminate him. In re Chinibash Ghosh, 1 C. L. R., 436, and Ex-parte Virabuddra, 1 Mad., 199, followed. If these statements are confessions, they are clearly inadmissible under s. 164, as the appended certificate does not show they were voluntarily made or that the Magistrate enquired whether they were so made; while the nature of the questions put indicates that they were not so made. And if they are statements other than confessions under s. 364, they are equally inadmissible as having been made before the case reached the stage at which the examination of the accused is authorized. *QUEEN-EMPEROR v. series of searching questions, to force the accused to criminate himself. The real object involved in the power given to the Court under s. 250 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is to enable the Judge to ascertain from time to time from the accused (especially if he be undefended) such explanation as he may desire to give regarding any statement made by the witnesses, or, at the close of the case for the prosecution, to elicit from the accused how he proposes to meet such portions of the evidence as, in the opinion of the Court, implicate the accused in the commission of the offence with which he stands charged. *HOSSEIN BUKSH v. 12. ———— Cross-examination by Court—Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, s. 250.—It is improper for the Court to cross-examine a prisoner with the apparent object of convicting him out of his own mouth of false statements, and so making him prejudice himself in respect of the matter with which he is charged. *EMPRESS v. 13. ———— Mode of recording examination—Certificate of Magistrate—Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, s. 346.—In recording the examinations of accused persons under s. 346 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in the language in which they are given, a Magistrate need not take down the examination in his own hand; it is enough that he append a certificate that the examination was conducted in his presence, and contains accurately all that was stated by the accused person. *QUEEN v. 14. ———— Act XXV of 1861, s. 205—Act X of 1872, s. 346—Attestation of Magistrate.—Under s. 205 of the Criminal Procedure Code, it is not necessary for the Magistrate to state in the body of the examination that the statement comprised every question put to the accused and every answer given by him, and that he had had liberty to add to or explain his answers. Attestation at the foot of the examination is sufficient; but in case of doubt, oral evidence should be admitted to prove the regularity of the proceedings. QUEEN v. GOSHTO LAL DUTT

Prior to the 8th January 1878, no notice was given by A of her intention not to renew the license, nor had the license been recalled by the Collector. Between the 1st January 1878 and the 8th January 1878, both days inclusive, A's servants sold spirituous and fermented liquors by retail. On these facts A's servants were convicted, under s. 62 of Act X of 1871, of the illicit sale of liquor. Held, following the opinion expressed in Empress v. Seymour,

EXCISE ACT (X OF 1871)—concluded.

I. L. R., 1 All., 630, that the convictions were bad, as A's license, under the provisions of s. 32 of that Act, remained in force until she gave notice of her intention not to renew it or it was recalled by the Collector. The principle of the decision in Empress v. Seymour dissented from. A should have been prosecuted under s. 67 of the Excise Act for not paying her monthly fee in advance. *EMPRESS v. 3. ———— Effect of repeal of Act VIII of 1859—Imprisonment for debt—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, ss. 3 and 342—Act I of 1868 (General Clauses Consolidation Act), s. 6—Procedure.—Held by a majority of the Full Bench (SARGENT and BAYLEY, JJ., dissenting) that a judgment-debtor, imprisoned in satisfaction of the decree against him under Act VIII of 1859, was not entitled, under Act X of 1877, to be released on the coming into operation of the latter Act, if he had then been imprisoned for more than six months, but less than two years. Per WESTROFF, C.J.—The judgment-creditor had, under Act VIII of 1859, the right (subject to be divested only under the circumstances stated) to have such judgment-debtor as the above detained in custody for two years, unless he in the meantime fully satisfied the decree. Ch. XIX of Act X of 1877, sub-division I, is essentially prospective throughout. S. 342 must therefore be construed as relating only to future imprisonment, consequent on arrests to be made under Act X of 1877. There is not in Ch. XIX of that Act any trace of an intention on the part of the Legislature to deal with imprisonment commenced before the coming into force of the Act. Notwithstanding the repeal of Act VIII of 1859 by Act X of 1877, Act I of 1868, s. 6, saves the committal under Act VIII of 1859, while that Act was in force, of a judgment-debtor, and also his consequent detention, commenced before the coming into force of Act X of 1877, if such detention is to be regarded as "procedure." The effect of Act I of 1868, s. 6, and Act X of 1877, s. 3, taken in combination, is to remove from the scope of the latter Act all proceedings after decree initiated before its coming into force, and then still pending, and to leave within its range all proceedings after decree initiated after its coming into force, though the suits and decrees, in and under which such last-mentioned proceedings may be taken, were commenced and made before Act X of 1877 came into force. Therefore, assuming the rule as to the retro-active force of enactments relating to procedure laid down in Wright v. Hale (6 H. and N., 227) to apply, still s. 342 of Act X of 1877 is not retrospective. But the question raised by the present application being one, not merely of procedure, but of the divestment of the existing right of the judgment-creditor, the presumption is (in the absence of express legislation or direct implication to the contrary) against giving retro-active force to s. 342 of Act X of 1877. The cases relating to questions of mere procedure, whereby a retro-active force has been given to enactments, reviewed, and distinguished from those by which no such force was given, by reason of their raising questions which affected vested rights. Per SARGENT, J.—Ss. 1 and 3 of Act X of 1877, taken in connection with Act I of 1868, s. 6, show that, whilst saving all acts already done in execution of a decree in a suit instituted before Act X of 1877 came into force, all matters of procedure in execution subsequent to that date should be determined by the Act itself. The question raised by the present application is one of procedure, for the conditions and period under and for which the writ of imprisonment remains in force are as much matters relating to procedure as the issuing of the writ. Neither the wording of s. 342 or the heading to Ch. XIX of Act X of 1877 necessarily confine the "imprisonment" therein referred to to imprisonment commenced since that Act came into force. Though the judgment-creditor, by the arrest and imprisonment of his debtor, acquires a right different from the mere right of a plaintiff to have his cause of action tried according to a certain procedure, yet the rule that an Act is not to be construed retrospectively so as to defeat an existing right, is only a rule of construction, and must yield to the intention of the Legislature. It is difficult to suppose that the Legislature, when introducing a benign change into the law of debtor and creditor, in harmony with modern legislation, could have intended that two laws should continue for the next two years to operate concurrently, and that debtors imprisoned on the day before the latter Act came into force should be liable to be detained under the severer enactment. Per BAYLEY, J.—Cases on the construction of statutes relating to procedure reviewed. History of imprisonment for debt before recent legislation in England and before the abolition of the Supreme Court in Bombay. The change effected by Act VIII of 1859 in the relative positions of debtor and creditor pointed out. Coombe v. Caw (18 H. L. R., 268) is inconsistent with the inviolable right claimed by the judgment-creditor to detain the judgment-debtor for two years. The sections of Act VIII of 1859, relating to imprisonment for debt and its duration, are concerned with procedure alone. The definitions of "decree" and "judgment-debtor" in Act X of 1877 are wide enough to include decrees passed, and judgment-debtors who have become such, before the coming into force of the Act. Ss. 341 and 342 of Act X of 1877 are applicable to proceedings pending when the Act came into force. The Legislature intended that the improvements introduced by the new Code should apply to suits brought under the old Code in those cases in which, consistently with the provisions of the new Code, they might, upon the ordinary principles of the interpretation of statutes, be clearly applicable. S. 3 of Act X of 1877 implies that the procedure after decree shall be according to the provisions of that Act. In re Sambhoochunder Halder, 1 Bourke, 69, and Williams v. Smith, 4 H. and N., 559, distinguished. S. 6 of Act I of 1868 does not apply in the present case. When of two possible constructions one is in strict harmony with the improvements introduced by the Act, and with the spirit of modern legislation, while the other treats the point under consideration as not having been considered by the Legislature at all, the former is to be preferred. Per GREEN, J.—Apart from s. 1 and the proviso to s. 3, there is not in Act X of 1877 any provision as to its operation with regard to pending or past proceedings. S. 1 does not alter or abridge the legal effect, after 1st October 1877, of proceedings had and completed before that date; and in construing s. 3 regard must be had to Act I of 1868, s. 6, though the general rule of construction contained in the last-mentioned section must yield to the intention of the Legislature expressed in any subsequent Act. The proviso to s. 3, coupled with s. 1 of Act X of 1877, shows that the intention of the Legislature was that the repeal of the old Procedure Act was to affect, to some extent, the procedure, other than that prior to decree, in suits instituted before Act X of 1877 came into force. Ample effect would be given to this intention, while regard would still be had to s. 6 of Act I of 1868 by holding that in all steps and proceedings, not prior to decree, had and taken after the 1st October 1877, in suits instituted before 1st October 1877, the provisions of the new Code are to be operative. Cases giving a retro-active force to enactments relating only to procedure reviewed and distinguished. The right of an execution-creditor to detain his debtor till satisfaction of the decree for a period not exceeding two years, under a warrant issued before 1st October 1877 by virtue of Act VIII of 1859, is in nowise affected by the new Code coming into operation. Per WEST, J.—Cases on the retro-activity of enactments reviewed. Act VIII of 1859 must have clothed the Court's orders with an abiding validity, and the judgment-creditors with an abiding right, or else with none at all. The ministerial officer is to act on the order of the Court according to its original purport. The order, in the absence of an express provision to the contrary, retains its validity until it is withdrawn or varied. The new procedure, therefore, does not apply, whether as touching person or property, except perhaps in matters of mere administration or provisional arrangement. It cannot, at any rate, apply so as to deprive the creditor of his right once acquired by the arrest of his judgment-debtor in execution. Any change in the relations of the parties can be made only in accordance with the later and existing law, but their previously subsisting relations continue to subsist as before. It is unlikely that the Legislature intended s. 342 of Act X of 1877 to apply to cases of imprisonment other than those arising under that Act. S. 342 is simply a negative provision, and the affirmative provisions with which it is to be read are to be found in the same chapter of the Act, and these can only be applied to cases arising after the Act has come into force. The close of the litigious transaction, like that of a contractual one, fixes the rights of the parties according to the then existing law, and in principle there is no distinction between a construction prejudicial to the debtor and a construction prejudicial to the creditor. The imprisonment under Act VIII of 1859, as a "proceeding commenced," comes within the scope of s. 6 of Act I of 1868. Act VIII of 1859, therefore, and not Act X of 1877, governs the enforcement of the judgment-creditor's decree throughout the proceedings consequent on his application for the debtor's imprisonment under the former Act. If the present application for discharge be a proceeding commenced since the new Act came into force, it is not integral with the previous proceedings in execution. If, on the other hand, it is integral with them, it is part of a proceeding commenced before the new Act came into force. In neither case can it bring within the new Act orders deriving their validity from another law. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF RATANSI KALIANJI

4. ————— Change of the law pending execution—Civil Procedure Code, Act VIII of 1859 and Act X of 1877—Order setting aside sale in execution of decree for irregularity—Appeal.—Proceedings to execute a decree commenced when the former Code of Civil Procedure (Act VIII of 1859) was in force; but property belonging to the judgment-debtor was sold in pursuance of those proceedings on the 14th of November 1877 after the new Code (Act X of 1877) came into operation. Subsequently, at the instance of the applicant, the Court made an order setting aside the sale on the ground of irregularity. Held that this order was governed by the former Code, and was consequently not subject to appeal. CHINTO JOSHI v. 5. ————— Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 295—Change of the law pending execution of decree—Prior and subsequent attaching creditors—General Clauses Act (I of 1868), s. 6.—A judgment-creditor, in execution of his decree, attached certain property belonging to his judgment-debtor while Act VIII of 1859 was in force. This property was ultimately sold on the 9th of January 1879, that is, after the new Code of Civil Procedure (Act X of 1877) came into operation. Two days before the sale another judgment-creditor applied to have his decree satisfied out of the same property by a rateable distribution of the proceeds which might be realized. Held that the prior attaching creditor, by his attachment under the Code of 1859, acquired,

6. ———— Change of law—Effect on proceedings already commenced—Civil Procedure Code, Act VIII of 1859, s. 216, and Act X of 1877, s. 266, cl. (g)—Attachment—Political pension.—On the 28th of September 1877, i.e., three days before the new Code of Civil Procedure (Act X of 1877) came into operation, an application was made for the enforcement of a money-decree by attachment (inter alia) of a political pension enjoyed by the defendants. Under s. 216 of the former Code (Act VIII of 1859), a notice was issued on the same day to the defendants, calling upon them to show cause why the decree should not be executed. The defendants accordingly appeared on the day fixed, at which date the new Code had come into force, and contended that under s. 266, cl. (g), of the new Code, the pension was no longer attachable. Held that all proceedings commenced and pending when Act X of 1877 became law were, under the General Clauses Act (Act I of 1868), s. 6, to be governed by the Code theretofore in force, the general rule of construction contained in that section not being affected or varied by ss. 1 and 3 of Act X of 1877; and that a bona fide application for enforcement of a decree in a particular way, coupled with an order of the Court in furtherance of that object, as much constitutes a proceeding in execution commenced and pending as the actual issue of a warrant of attachment. VIDYARAM v. being by regular suit against the surety. Subsequently to the passing of Act VII of 1888, the decree-holder made a fresh application for such execution under s. 46 of that Act. The Court, after referring to s. 6 of the General Clauses Act, rejected the application on the ground that proceedings against the surety had been commenced before Act VII of 1888 had come into force. Held on appeal that the application should have been allowed. ABDUL WAHAB v. 9. ———— Execution under Bengal Act VIII of 1869 and Act VIII of 1885—Right of procedure.—Upon the death of the full owner, the mother took out probate of a will, in which she was appointed executrix. The will was afterwards disputed by the minor son of the testator, and probate was revoked; but, while the mother was in possession of the estate as executrix, she sued and obtained a decree for rent under Bengal Act VIII of 1869. Upon the application of the minor for the execution of the decree, Held that the mode in which the decree was executed under the old Rent Act, Bengal Act VIII of 1869, was, in so far as it was a right at all that belonged to the judgment-creditor, not a private right, but a mere right of procedure, and the execution was therefore to be governed by Act VIII of 1885. UNABOONDURY DASTY v. 10. ———— Decree transferred to Collector for execution—Talukhdars Act (Bombay Act VI of 1888), s. 31, cl. 2—Construction of statute—Retrospective operation—Sanction to sale made necessary by new law.—A decree upon a mortgage-bond passed against part of a talukhdar's estate on the 15th August 1887 was transferred, under s. 320 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), to the Collector for execution. The property was sold on the 5th August 1889, but the Collector refused to confirm the sale, as the sanction of the Governor in Council under cl. 2, s. 31 of the Talukhdars Act (Bombay Act VI of 1888), which came into force on the 25th March 1889, had not been obtained. Held that the section was not retrospective in its operation, and that the sale should be confirmed, although no sanction had been obtained. When the Act passed, the plaintiff had already acquired a vested right by the decree to have the property sold, and the presumption was that the Legislature did not intend to interfere with that vested right. That presumption was not rebutted by any intention to interfere appearing in the Act itself. KALIAN MOTI v. PATHUNHAI FALJIBHAI

Consolidation Act (I of 1868), s. 6.—On the 30th January 1894 an application was made for execution of a decree passed on the 5th of the same month, and certain property was thereafter duly attached. On the 8th February 1894, the sale proclamation was published, and on the 26th March the sale was held. On the 17th April 1894, the judgment-debtor applied to the Court under the provisions of s. 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure (which section was added to the Code by Act V of 1894, and which came into operation on the 2nd March 1894) to have the sale set aside on payment to the auction-purchaser of 5 per cent. on the purchase-money and to the decree-holder of the amount mentioned in the sale proclamation. The auction-purchaser resisted the application on the ground that the section could not affect the sale in question. Held (PETTERAM, C.J., and O'KINEALY, J., dissenting) that the section conferred a new and substantive right on the judgment-debtor, and was not merely a matter of procedure; and that, as Act V of 1894 does not clearly indicate the intention of the Legislature that it was meant to have retrospective effect, the section had no application to pending proceedings, and the judgment-debtor was not entitled to have the sale set aside under its provisions. Held per PETTERAM, C.J., and O'KINEALY, J., that the section merely dealt with a matter of procedure and applied to the sale, which the judgment-debtor was entitled to have set aside. Per PETTERAM, C.J.—All that s. 310A does, so far as the decree-holder and judgment-debtor are concerned, is to extend the period during which the latter may discharge his liability by 30 days beyond the date of the sale, and is merely a modification of the way in which the successful litigant may obtain the fruits of his decree; and even if it be considered as creating a new and substantive right in the judgment-debtor, the words used by the Legislature in Act V of 1894 must be taken to have been used with the express intention that the section should have a retrospective effect in the sense that it should take effect on sales held after the Act came into operation, though the execution-proceedings, of which the sale was a part, had been commenced before the Act came into operation. Per O'KINEALY, J.—Act XIV of 1882 is on the face of it an Act of procedure and nothing more, and what the Legislature intended to do by Act V of 1894 was to amend the rules of that Code with regard to the sale and delivery of property, and the section, both in form and substance, is merely a rule of procedure under which no party has a vested interest. In addition, as under s. 316 of the Code a purchaser has no vested interest in the property before the date of the certificate, he could not insist on the sale being confirmed and a certificate being given him if the amount due by the judgment-debtor be paid in before that date. *Lal Mohan Mukerjee v. 12. Civil Procedure Code (1889), s. 310A—Civil Procedure Code Amendment Act (V of 1894)—Construction of statute. Sale in execution of decree held after Act V of 1894 came into operation, the execution-proceedings being commenced before—General Clauses Consolidation Act (I of 1868), s. 6—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 174—Civil Procedure Code (1889), s. 622—Superintendence of High Court.—On the 8th February 1894, a decree was obtained against A and others in the Small Cause Court of Calcutta, and was subsequently transferred to one J, who was substituted in the place of the original decree-holder. On the 26th July, J applied in the Small Cause Court for execution of the decree, and on the same date the decree was transferred for execution to the District Court of Bankura. On the 3rd August, a writ of attachment issued, and on the 5th it was served. Sale proclamation issued on the 11th, and was served on the 14th August, and on the 20th September the sale took place. On the 27th September 1894, the judgment-debtor applied under s. 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure, which section became part of the Code under the provisions of Act V of 1894, passed on the 2nd March 1894, to have the sale set aside. The District Judge, relying upon the case of Grish Chandra Basu v. Apurba Krishna Dass, I. L. R., 21 Cal., 940, together with the principle enunciated in the cases of Lal Mohan Mukerjee v. Jogendra Chandra Roy, I. L. R., 14 Cal., 636, and Usir Ali v. Ram Komal Shaha, I. L. R., 15 Cal., 383, refused to set it aside on the ground that s. 310A was not a mere matter of procedure, and Act V of 1894 had no retrospective effect, and therefore s. 310A was not applicable to proceedings in execution of a decree which had been passed before that section came into operation. In an application under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code to set aside this decision as wrong, —Held by the full Court that the decision in Lal Mohan Mukerjee v. Jogendra Chander Roy, I. L. R., 14 Cal., 636, so far as it holds that s. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act creates a new right in a judgment-debtor, and is therefore inapplicable to a case in which the decree was passed before that Act became law, is wrong. The cases of Usir Ali v. Ram Komal Shaha, I. L. R., 15 Cal., 383, and Grish Chandra Basu v. Apurba Krishna Dass, I. L. R., 21 Cal., 940, which are based upon the same principle, are also wrongly decided. Quere—Whether the decision in Lal Mohan Mukerjee v. Jogendra Chander Roy, I. L. R., 14 Cal., 636, was correct under s. 6 of the General Clauses Act by reason of the execution-proceedings having been commenced under Bengal Act VIII of 1869, an Act repealed by the Bengal Tenancy Act. That question did not arise in the present case, for though the execution-proceedings were instituted under the old law, the case is unaffected by s. 6 of the General Clauses Act, as the change in the law was brought about not by the repeal of the old Act, but by the addition to it of a new section (310A). Held, therefore, that s. 310A was applicable to the proceedings in execution in the present case, and in that view the Court below was bound, upon the application of the judgment-debtor, to set aside the sale, and, not having done so, it had failed to exercise jurisdiction within the meaning of s. 822 of the Code. 13. — Sale in execution of decree, Application to set aside—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 810A—Civil Procedure Code Amendment Act (V of 1894)—Application of Act V of 1894 when proceedings in execution had commenced before its enactment.—A house of the judgment-debtor, having long previously been attached in execution of a decree, was brought to sale on the 9th of March 1894, that is, shortly after the enactment of Act V of 1894. The judgment-debtor now applied under the Civil Procedure Code, s. 810A, that the sale be set aside. Held that the provisions of Act V of 1894, whereby the abovementioned section was added to the Civil Procedure Code, were applicable to the case. BANGASAMI NAIDU v. 14. — Sale in execution of a decree upon a mortgage before the Act—Gujarat Talukhdars Act (Bombay Act VI of 1888), s. 31—Necessity of sanction of the Governor in Council to the sale.—Certain talukhdari estate was mortgaged under a sankhat executed before the Gujarat Talukhdars Act (Bombay Act VI of 1888) came into force. On the 22nd August 1889 (i.e., subsequent to the Act coming into force), a decree was passed for sale of the mortgaged property. The decree was transferred for execution to the Collector, who refused to put up the property to sale without the previous sanction of Government, as required by s. 31 of the Talukhdars Act. Held that s. 31 of the Act had no application to the present case. The san-mortgage having been executed before the Act came into force, and left with its validity untouched by cl. (1) of s. 31, the ordinary remedy of the mortgagee to bring the property to sale was not taken away by that section. The sanction of the Governor in Council was therefore not necessary to the sale in execution of the decree on the mortgage. NAGAR PRAGJI v. JIVABHAI BAVAJI I. L. R., 19 Bom., 80

When therefore a Court which had passed a decree has ceased to have jurisdiction to execute it, the application for execution may be made either to that Court, although it has ceased to have jurisdiction to execute the decree, or to the Court which (if the suit wherein the decree was passed were instituted at the time of making application to execute it) would have jurisdiction to try the suit. Per FIELD, J.—A Court does not cease to be "the Court which passed the decree" merely by reason that the head-quarters of such Court are removed to another place, or merely because the local limits of the jurisdiction of such Court are altered. *LACHMAN PUNDEE v. 37. ———— Power of Court executing decree—Objection to validity of amendment—Civil Procedure Code, s. 206.—The Court in a suit upon a bond gave the plaintiff a decree, making a deduction from the amount claimed of a sum covered by a receipt produced by the defendant as evidence of part payment, and admitted to be genuine by the plaintiff. The decree was for a total amount of Rs. 1,282. Subsequently, on application by the decree-holder and without giving notice to the judgment-debtor, the Court which passed the decree, purporting to act under s. 206 of the Civil Procedure Code, altered the decree and made it for a sum of Rs. 1,460. The decree-holder took out execution, and the judgment-debtor objected that the decree was for Rs. 1,282 and had been improperly altered. The Court executing the decree disallowed the objection on the ground that it was not such as could be entertained in the execution department. Held that, when a decree-holder executes his decree, a judgment-debtor is competent to object that the decree is not the decree of the Court fit to be executed, and therefore not capable of execution; and that the judgment-debtor in this case could raise the question whether the decree, which was altered behind his back, was a valid decree and fit to be executed.

44. ————— Uncertain decree
—Evidence to explain decree.—When a decree is so uncertain that it is impossible to ascertain what is decreed, a plaintiff cannot be put into possession of any other thing by execution than that which the decree describes. Evidence cannot be given in the execution department to amend any uncertainty in the decree. The law allows certain matters to be ascertained in execution, but beyond those it is the duty of the Judge to take care that his decree is so precise that it is capable of execution, without leaving it to the Court of execution to decide what the Judge intended to decree. DWARKANATH HALDAR v. In the execution-proceedings, the defendant raised an objection that the plaintiff could not have execution for a greater quantity of land than he had claimed originally, and the Court executing the decree allowed the objection. No appeal from the Court's order was made, but the plaintiff brought a suit to recover possession of the larger amount of land mentioned in the compromise. Held that the order of the Court executing the decree was erroneous in law, and might properly be reconsidered upon an application for review; but that the present suit came within s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code, and therefore could not be maintained. MORISULLAH v. EXECUTION OF DECREE—continued.2. APPLICATION FOR EXECUTION, AND POWERS OF COURT—continued.

47. ————— Refusal to execute decree on equitable grounds—The Court executing a decree not competent to go behind it.—The holders of a decree, made in 1866, against K and certain other persons jointly applied to recover mesne profits in execution thereof. K paid the decree-holders the mesne profits claimed, and then sued his co-judgment-debtors for contribution, and in 1878 obtained a decree against them. Subsequently the holders of the decree of 1866 again applied to recover mesne profits in execution thereof, and in the proceedings which followed it was decided that mesne profits were not recoverable under the decree. After this, K's representatives applied for execution of the decree of 1878. The lower Courts refused to execute the decree on the ground that, as under the decree of 1866, on which the decree of 1878 was based, mesne profits were not recoverable, it would not be equitable to allow a decree for contribution passed on a contrary supposition to be executed. Held that the lower Courts were not competent to go behind the decree of 1878, but must deal with it as it stood. RAMPHAL RAI v. KASHI NATH PANDAY 5 C. L. R., 305

49. ————— Civil Procedure Code, s. 244—Execution-proceedings—Re-valuation of improvements allowed for in decree.—A mortgagor obtained a decree for redemption on payment of the mortgage amount, together with a further sum assessed as the value of improvements made by the mortgagee. When the decree-holder applied for the execution of the decree, it was contended on behalf of the mortgagee that the improvements ought to be re-valued, as they were at the time of execution of more value than at the date of the decree. Held that the mortgagee was entitled to re-valuation in the execution-proceedings. RAMUNNI v. 50. ————— Objections to sale of property.—The holder of a money decree, which declared the liability of certain mortgaged properties to be sold in satisfaction, petitioned the Court that, as one of the properties (B) had been sold by the judgment-debtor to H, it might be exempted from sale. The judgment-debtor admitted the sale, but subsequently made an application that B might be sold first and the rest of the properties in succession. The Judge accordingly passed an order to that effect, to which H was not a party. Subsequently H

Refusal of execution—Irregularity in instituting suit.—It is not competent to a Court executing a decree to refuse execution in a case where no fraud is suggested, on the ground that the plaintiffs were allowed improperly to institute the suit. SUBHAMANIAN PATTAR v. 52.

Decree against minor—Question of minority—Review.—In the execution of a decree passed against a minor the Court cannot enquire whether the minor was or was not properly represented in the suit in which the decree was given. It is bound to presume that the decree was rightly passed and to execute it according to its terms. The minor's remedy is either to apply for a review of judgment or to file a suit to procure an injunction to restrain the execution of the decree. MAHOMED NOOR-ULLAH KHAN v. HARCHARAN RAI [6 N. Procedure applicable to execution of decrees—Appeal, Right of—Review—Civil Procedure Code, s. 623—Limitation.—It is the duty of a Court to which an application to execute a decree is presented to satisfy itself whether or no such application is barred by limitation.

If the Court on such an application omits to decide the question of limitation or decides it against the judgment-debtor, and in his opinion wrongly, the judgment-debtor may either appeal or can apply under s. 623 of the Code of Civil Procedure for review of the Court's order, and thus whether notice of the application for execution had been issued to him or not. A Court, in executing a decree, should look to the substance rather than to the form of applications presented to it. Where an application was made by a judgment-debtor objecting to the execution of a decree against him on the ground that it was barred by limitation, previous objections to execution having been disallowed, it was held that, the relief prayed for being one which could only be granted by way of review, the application should be treated as one for that purpose. RAMU RAI v. 65. Application for execution withdrawn by decree-holder—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 373, 647.—The ruling in Surya Prasad v. Sita Ram, I. L. R., 10 All., 71, only decided that, where the circumstances in regard to an application for execution of decree show that it was withdrawn at the instance of the pleader of the decree-holder, and that no sanction was given to its withdrawal with liberty to present a fresh application, any subsequent application made by that decree-holder for execution is prohibited by s. 373 read with s. 647 of the Civil Procedure Code. But where a Court of its own motion, and without being moved either by the decree-holder or by his pleader, takes upon itself to strike off an application for execution for the mere purpose of clearing its file, that is not a proceeding under any provision of the Code which could bar a decree-holder from making a fresh application for execution. A first application for execution of a decree was ordered by the Court to be struck off for want of prosecution, and upon the statement of the decree-holder's pleader "that at present the case may be struck off." No permission was given to the decree-holder to withdraw the application with leave to take fresh proceedings. Held that a subsequent application for execution of the decree was barred by s. 373 read with s. 647 of the Civil Procedure Code. Surya Prasad v. Sita Ram, I. L. In default of payment within the prescribed time, they were to stand forever foreclosed. Against this decree the defendant appealed to the High Court. On the 10th September 1888, the High Court passed an order allowing the defendant to withdraw the appeal. On the 17th December 1888, plaintiffs applied for execution of the decree of the 12th November 1886. The lower Court, regarding the withdrawal of the second appeal as practically a confirmation of the decree of the 12th November 1886, computed the six months allowed for redemption from the date of the order of withdrawal (10th September 1888) and granted the plaintiffs' application. On appeal to the High Court, Held, reversing the decision of the lower Court, that the application was time-barred, and that the plaintiff was foreclosed. The time allowed for redemption was to be computed, not from the date of the High Court's order permitting the withdrawal of the appeal, but from the date of the decree applied from (i.e., 12th November 1886). The order of withdrawal was not a decree. The only decree which could be executed was that of the 12th November 1886. The redemption money not having been paid within six months from that date, the plaintiffs were foreclosed. The Court could not in execution-proceedings enlarge the time fixed for redemption. Ishwargar v. Chudasama Manabhai, I. L. R., 13 Bom., 106, followed. Per BRIDWOOD, J.—It was open to the plaintiffs to apply, if so advised, to the High Court for a review of the order of withdrawal of the 10th September 1888, with a view to the enlargement of the time of redemption as a condition which might equitably have been permitted when the defendant was allowed to withdraw the second appeal. *PATLON v. The words "suit" and "appeal" in s. 647 apply to suits and appeals in the strict sense of those terms, and were not intended to cover proceedings for the enforcement of rights decreed in a suit or appeal. An application for execution of decree by arrest of the judgment-debtor was ordered by the Court to be struck off upon the statement of the decree-holder's pleader that the judgment-debtor was in hiding, and that the decree-holder did not desire to prosecute the application further. At that time an order for a warrant of arrest had been issued subject to the payment of fees, but those fees had

S. 647 of the Code of Civil Procedure cannot, on its true construction, be applied to execution of decree, and was inapplicable to petitions for execution before, and independently of the passing of Act VI of 1892, ss. 4 and 5. A first application for execution of a decree having been, on the decree-holder's petition, struck off the list of cases pending for hearing, a second application was made within the period of limitation. Held that the first application, notwithstanding that the order striking it off had been made, was not annulled, but afforded a fresh starting point for limitation. Held also that, although the petition for execution had been withdrawn without leave to apply again having been expressly granted by the Court, the petitioner's right to renew his petition within due time remained. The provisions of s. 373, which could only have applied through the effect of s. 647, had not been rendered applicable thereby to petitions for execution. The judgment in Sarja Prasad v. Sita Ram, I. L. R., 10 All., 71, overruled; that in Banku Behary Gangopadhyaya v. Nili Madhab Chatterpadhyaya, I. L. R., 18 Cal., 685, approved. THAKUR PRASAD v. FAKIR ULLAH dismiss an application for execution when the applicant fails through his own laches to put the Court in a position to proceed with his application. Similarly, a Court has inherent power, if such power is not conferred upon it by statute, to proceed forthwith to decide an application for execution of a decree on the materials before it, when time has been granted to a party to perform any act necessary for the further progress of the application, and that act has not been done. When an order striking an execution-case off the file of pending cases, or dismissing it on grounds other than a distinct finding that the decree is incapable of execution, that the decree-holder's right to get the decree executed is barred by limitation, or by any other rule of law, or on some similar ground on which the application has clearly been dismissed on the merits, whether the word "dismissed" or the words "struck off the file" or any other similar words have been used in the order, the decree-holder is not barred by the force of any such order from presenting and prosecuting a fresh application for the execution of his decree. DRONKAL SINGH v. EXECUTION OF DECREE—continued.3. APPLICATION FOR EXECUTION, AND POWERS OF COURT—continued.

Limitation—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 89.—An application for an order absolute for sale of mortgaged property under the provisions of s. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, is not an application for execution of a decree, and need not therefore be in the form prescribed by s. 235 of the Code of Civil Procedure. A decree was passed in a mortgage suit on the 13th July 1887 by consent, which directed that the amount due was to be paid in ten annual instalments during the years 1295-1304 (1888-1897) in the month of Falgum (February) each year, and that, on default of three successive instalments, the whole amount was to become at once due and payable. The mortgagor having defaulted in payment of the instalments due in the years 1297, 1298, and 1299 (1890, 1891, and 1892), the mortgagee, on the 18th February 1893, presented an application to the Court under s. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act for an order absolute for sale. That application was not verified by the mortgagee, and the mortgagor objected that, not being so verified as required by s. 235 of the Code, it could not be granted. On the 9th May 1893, the mortgagee applied for and obtained leave to verify the application, which he did on that day. It was urged on behalf of the mortgagor that the application must be treated as made on the 9th May, and therefore not within three years of the date on which the 1297 instalment became due (7th March 1890), and that it was therefore barred by limitation. Held that the application did not require to be in the form provided by s. 235, and consequently the non-verification did not affect it, and that it was not barred by limitation. AJUDHIA PERSHAD v. Defective application for execution of decree—Civil Procedure Code (1882), ss. 245 and 647—Amendment of execution petition—Limitation.—One, being entitled under a decree of 1809 to a share in the income of a zamindari, obtained a decree in a suit of 1887 against certain recent purchasers of the zamindari, declaring that he had a valid charge on the estate and awarding to him, besides his costs, the amount due in respect of one year. He now applied in execution of the latter decree for payment of the amount due in respect of five years as well as his costs. An application to amend the petition for execution by inserting a reference to the former decree was made after the right of the petitioner in respect of some of the years in question had become barred by limitation. This application was refused by the Court of first instance. Held that, under the circumstances of the case, the amendment should have been allowed to be made. SATTAPPA CHETTI v. The plaintiffs applied for execution of the decree, and filed a darkhast, praying that the defendants be ordered to act as directed by the decree, and that, if they failed to do so, steps be taken according to law. Held that the darkhast was not in accordance with s. 235, cl. The plaintiff brought a suit for the recovery of certain timber or damages for its removal, and got a decree. The defendant appealed, and was ultimately successful in getting the plaintiff's suit dismissed, but meanwhile the timber had been taken in execution of the decree and sold. The defendant applied to the original Subordinate Judge's Court in execution of the High Court decree for restitution of the timber or Rs. 13,325 damages. The plaintiff objected that the defendant must bring a suit, and could not make this claim in execution. The Subordinate Judge overruled this objection, but held that he was limited to a grant of Rs. 5,000, the pecuniary limit to his original jurisdiction, and awarded the defendant that sum for his timber. Held the matter was rightly dealt with in execution, and that the jurisdiction of the original Court in execution was neither ousted by the fact that the value of the property in dispute exceeded the pecuniary limits of the Court's jurisdiction,

78. ————— Decree for redemption within a specified time—Appeal against decree—Power of Court in execution to extend time for redemption allowed by decree—Ground for enlarging time.—The plaintiffs sued for the redemption of certain mortgaged property. On the 1st March 1886, a decree was passed declaring the plaintiffs entitled to redeem on payment by them to the defendants of Rs. 49-11-0 within three months from the date of the decree. Against this decree the defendants (the mortgagees) appealed on the ground that a much larger sum than Rs. 49-11-0 was due to them on the mortgage. The plaintiffs also filed objections to this decree under s. 56 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882) on the ground that the mortgage-debt had been long ago paid off, and that now a large sum was due to them from the mortgagees who had been in receipt of the profits of the property. Under these circumstances, the plaintiffs did not pay the Rs. 49-11-0 within three months as ordered by the decree. On the 12th October 1886, they presented an application for execution, and paid into Court the Rs. 49-11-0. The lower Court granted their application, and ordered possession of the property to be given to them. The defendants appealed to the High Court. Held, reversing the order of the Court below, that the Court in executing the decree had no power to alter the language of the decree, which it would virtually do if it enlarged the time mentioned in it by accepting the Rs. 49-11-0 paid into Court by the plaintiffs on the 12th October 1886. Held also that, even if the Court had power to enlarge the time in the course of execution, the mere fact that the plaintiff had lodged an appeal would afford no special ground for enlarging the time. *ISHWAROAR v. A declaration of Her Majesty in Council must not be considered as not being equivalent to an order. When Her Majesty in Council does make a declaration, the form in which the declaration is conceived and the words in which that order is framed amount to a direction to the Court below to clothe that declaration in the proper form of a mandatory order, and to give effect to the mandatory order so expressed. If any difficulty should arise in that form, or be sought to be produced from having recourse to that non-existent ground of objection, the Privy Council will not fail to recommend Her Majesty to deal with such obstructiveness in the most serious and strongest manner. IN RE BARLOW v. At the same time, on appeal by two of the other persons aforesaid, it affirmed a decree which U had obtained against those persons and the sons of K for possession of two-thirds of the same property, in a suit in which he had claimed possession of the whole. It subsequently, on appeal by U against that portion of the decree made in the suit brought by him which dismissed his claim in respect to one-third of the property, reversed that portion and gave him a decree for the whole. The sons of K appealed to Her Majesty in Council only from the decree of the High Court setting aside the decree obtained by them in the Court of first instance for one-third of the property. Her Majesty in Council set aside this decree of the High Court, and restored the decree of the Court of first instance. In the meantime U was put into possession of the whole property in execution of the decree of the High Court which he had obtained in the suit brought by him. When the sons of K, in execution of the decree of Her Majesty in Council, applied for possession of one-third of the property, U opposed the application on the ground that he was in possession under a decree of the High Court which had become final. Held by a Full Bench of the High Court that the decree of Her Majesty in Council must be executed, notwithstanding that its execution involved the disturbance of the possession obtained by U under the decree of the High Court, which had become final. UDAI SINGH v. lower Courts, and directed the High Court to give effect to its order and declaration in the case. No orders were made by the High Court to this end, and it became the duty of the lower Courts to frame the final decree. The Judge made an order for the restitution of the property, but not an order for repayment of the rents and profits derived therefrom by the plaintiff during his possession. Held that the Judge should have made this order also, and that interest should be paid on the meane profits according to the rule that parties should be restored, as far as possible, to the same position as they were in when the Court by its erroneous action displaced them from it. HAMIDA alias KAJOO v. 88. ——— Execution of order giving effect to judgment of Privy Council—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 211, 253, 318—Meane profits—Cost of receiver and management—Interest on meane profits—Sureties for execution of decree.—Land was put up for sale and purchased in execution of a decree. The sale was confirmed and the purchaser was put into possession. On appeal against the order confirming the sale, the High Court held that the sale had been vitiated by certain irregularities and set it aside. The purchaser preferred an appeal to the Privy Council against the judgment of the High Court. While the appeal was pending, he was compelled to deliver up possession of the land, but security was furnished under an order of the Court by persons not being parties to the suit for its re-delivery to him and for the payment of meane profits in the event of his appeal being successful. Meanwhile the land in question was placed in charge of a receiver on the motion of other persons holding decrees against the judgment-debtors. On appeal the Privy Council reversed the order of the High Court. The purchaser was accordingly replaced in possession of the land, and he applied for execution in respect of the meane profits against the respondents in the Privy Council and the sureties. The Court of first instance dismissed the application as against the sureties, and limited the applicant's claim against the others to the net income of the land, less the cost of management by the receiver, and allowed him no interest. Held (1), although the appeals to the High Court and the Privy Council related to the order confirming the sale, and not to that by which possession was awarded, and the order in Council did not direct payment of meane profits, yet such payment was within its purview as being a benefit by way of restitution fairly and reasonably consequential upon it—Rodger v. Comptoir D'Escompte de Paris, L. R., 8 P. C., 465, followed; (2) the application was rightly dismissed against the sureties; (3) the charges involved by the appointment of the receiver should not have been allowed against the petitioner, since they were not necessary in the ordinary course of prudent management; (4) interest at 6 per cent. should have been allowed to the petitioner on the meane profits for each year from the end of the year to the date of payment. AMUNACHELLAM v. only decree susceptible of execution, and the specifications of the decrees of the lower Court or Courts as such may not be referred to and applied by the Court executing such decree. SHOHRAT SINGH v. BRIDGMAN . . . I. L. R., 4 All., 376

97. ————— Decree appealed from affirmed without stating amount of costs—Appeal only as to costs.—The defendant in a suit appealed from so much of the decree of the Court of first instance as related to the amount of costs payable by him to the plaintiff. The decree of the Appellate Court directed "that the order of the lower Court be upheld, and the appeal be dismissed: the appellant to pay the costs." Held that the amount of costs awarded by the Court of first instance, although they were not specified in the Appellate Court's decree, were recoverable in execution of that decree, inasmuch as those costs were the subject-matter of the appeal, and the Appellate Court, in affirming the decision of the first Court on that point, made them the substantive portion of its decree. *Shohrat Singh v. 98. ————— Decree appealed from affirmed without stating amount of costs of lower Court.—The original decree in a suit dismissed the suit with costs, which were specified. On appeal the Appellate Court directed that the original decree should be affirmed and the appeal dismissed, and that the appellant should pay the respondent's cost in the Appellate Court, which were specified. The decree of the Appellate Court did not contain any specification of the costs of the original Court. Held that the Court executing the appellate decree might execute it for the costs of the original Court looking to the decree of that Court to ascertain the amount thereof. Shohrat Singh v. Burrodacant Roy, 14 Moore's I. A., 465, referred to. Where the first Court of appeal affirmed the decree of the Court of first instance, and the High Court affirmed the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismissed the appeal, and the decree-holder made an application of which the object clearly was to have execution taken under the decree of the Appellate Court, by carrying out the mandatory part of the decree of the Court of first instance,—Held that the objection that the decree-holder did not in his application expressly ask the Court to execute the decree of last instance was under the circumstances a mere technical objection, and there was no reason why the execution asked for should not be allowed.

100. — Decree affirmed on appeal—

Jurisdiction—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 206, 579.—

The effect of s. 579 of the Civil Procedure Code is to cause the decree of the Appellate Court to supersede the decree of the first Court even where the appellate decree merely affirms the original decree, and does not reverse or modify it. Where a decree has been affirmed on appeal, the only decree which can be amended under s. 206 of the Code is the decree to be executed, and the decree to be executed is that of the Appellate Court and not the superseded decree of the first Court, though the latter may, if necessary, be referred to for the purpose of executing the appellate decree. The only Court which has jurisdiction to amend the appellate decree is the Court of appeal. So held by the Full Bench, MAHMOOD, J., dissenting. Shohrat Singh v. Bridgman, I. L. R., 4 All., 376, explained and followed. Kistokinkar Roy v. Raja Burrodacant Roy, 14 Moore's I. A., 465, discussed. MUHAMMAD SULAIMAN KHAN v. MUHAMMAD YAR KHAN

[I. L. R., 11 All., 267]

101. — Amendment of

decree by first Court after affirmance—Objection by judgment-debtor to execution of amended decree.—

The decree of a Court of first instance having on appeal been affirmed by the High Court, the first Court altered the decree which had been affirmed, intending to bring it into accordance with the judgment of the High Court. After the decrees had been altered, application was made to execute it as altered, but this was opposed by the judgment-debtor on the ground that that was not the decree which could be executed. Held by the Full Bench that the objection must prevail on the grounds that the decree sought to be executed was not that of the Appellate Court, and that the decree had been altered by the first Court, which had no power to alter it. Abdul Hayat Khan v. Chunia Kuar, I. L. R., 8 All., 877, referred to. MUHAMMAD SULAIMAN KHAN v. FATIMA I. L. R., 11 All., 314

102. — Confirmation by High

Court of decree of lower Court—Former dismissal of application for execution of original decree—Effect of an application for execution of appellate decree—Res judicata—Limitation.— Where the High Court confirms on appeal the decree of a subordinate Court, such confirmation has the same effect as an order of reversal would have had, in so far as it leaves the decree of the High Court as the only decree which exists for the purpose of execution, and the decree of the lower Court becomes incorporated with it. On 23rd July 1888, plaintiff obtained a decree for the redemption of certain lands on payment within three months of the amount due to the mortgagee, which was to be ascertained in execution proceedings. Against this decree the defendant appealed to the High Court. Pending the appeal, the plaintiff presented a darkhast for execution on the 4th October 1888. This darkhast was dismissed, as the plaintiff failed to produce a copy of the mortgage bond within the time allowed by the Court. The three months allowed by the decree for payment expired on the 23rd October 1888. On 11th February 1890, the High Court confirmed the decree, and on 11th April 1890 plaintiff presented a fresh darkhast for execution. Both the lower Courts dismissed this darkhast on the ground that the dismissal of the first darkhast operated as res judicata. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to execute the decree, and that his second darkhast was not barred either by limitation or on the principle of res judicata. NANCHAND v. VITHU

[I. L. R., 19 Bom., 258]

103. — Decree to be executed where there has been an appeal.—Where the Appellate Court has modified the decree of the Court below, the decree of the Appellate Court supercedes entirely that of the lower Court, and is the only decree which can be executed. *Shohrat Singh v. 104. — Appeal against part of decree—Decree affirmed in appeal—Period from which limitation runs after an appeal.—In a suit for the value of goods and for damages, the Court allowed the claim with respect only to a portion of the plaintiffs' claim, and rejected the rest. The plaintiffs appealed against the latter part of the decree. The decree was confirmed in appeal. The plaintiffs applied for execution of the decree after the expiration of three years from the date of the original decree, but within three years from the date of the appellate decree. The lower Court rejected the application as time-barred, being of opinion that the original decree still existed, there having been no appeal against that part of the decree which allowed the claim. Held, discharging the order of rejection, that when the Appellate Court confirms the decree of the Court below, the latter becomes incorporated in the decree of the Appellate Court, which is thenceforth the only decree to be executed. *SAKHALOHAND BIKHAWDAS v. obtained a decree for redemption of his mortgage "within six months from the date of this decree." The mortgagee appealed, but the Appellate Court confirmed the decree. The mortgagor sought to redeem within six months from the date of the appellate decree, but more than six months from the date of the original decree. Held that, though the decree of the Appellate Court became the final decree in the suit, and the only one capable of execution, yet, unless the time for payment of the redemption money has been postponed under s. 93 of the Transfer of Property Act or the decree of the original Court has been modified by an order on the appeal that the redemption money should be paid within six months of the date of the Appellate Court decree, the mortgagor may lose his right of redemption; the Court, therefore, to which application for execution was made should, before passing orders on the application, have given the plaintiff time to apply to the District Court to amend the decree under Transfer of Property Act, s. 92. MANAIKRAMAN v. UNNIAPPAN

(I. L. R., 15 Mad., 170)

106. ———— Decree for redemption of mortgage—Payment of the mortgage amount within three months—Absence of foreclosure clause—Appeal by mortgagee—Payment by mortgagor of the decretal amount after the expiration of three months—Withdrawal of the appeal by mortgagee—Computation of time for execution.—In a redemption suit filed by the plaintiffs (the mortgagors), they obtained a decree on the 1st March 1886, whereby they were directed to pay the defendant (the mortgagee) the sum of Rs 649-11-0 within three months, whereupon they were to get possession of the mortgaged property. The decree contained no clause of foreclosure in the event of non-payment. On the 19th April 1886, the defendants appealed to the High Court against the decree. On the 12th October 1886, long after the expiration of the three months prescribed by the decree, the plaintiff paid Rs 649-11-0 into the lower Court, and applied for execution of the decree. The Court made an order allowing the payment and granted execution, holding that it had power to extend the time for payment, and that there were good grounds for doing so in this case. The defendants appealed, and the High Court discharged that order on the ground that the Court executing a decree had no power to enlarge the time. On the 16th July 1890, the defendant obtained an order from the High Court permitting him to withdraw his appeal. The plaintiff then presented an application for execution of the original decree, contending that the order for withdrawal of the appeal was equivalent to a decree of the Appellate Court, and that, where there was an appeal, the time prescribed by the original decree ran from the date of the appellate decree. At the date of this application the money which the plaintiff had paid on the 12th October 1886 was still in Court. Held that the withdrawal of the appeal would not afford a fresh starting point, as the withdrawal rendered it unnecessary for any decree to be drawn up, and the only decree which could be executed was that which was passed by the original Court in March 1886. CHUDASAMA MANABHAI MADARSANG v. ISHWARGAR BUDHAGAR

107. ———— Conditional decree—Civil Procedure Code, s. 214—Pre-emption—Deposit of purchase money—Computation of time allowed for payment.—In a suit for pre-emption, the decree of the Court of first instance was conditional upon payment of the purchase money within one month from its date. After this period had expired without payment, the defendants appealed from the decree. The appeal was dismissed and the decree affirmed, and no fresh period for payment was expressly allowed by the decree of the Appellate Court. Held that the decree of the Appellate Court must be taken to have incorporated the terms of the decree of the Court of first instance, that the period of one month allowed for payment of the purchase-money must be calculated from the date of the Appellate Court's decree, and that payment by the decree-holder within one month from that date was in time. Shohrat Singh v. 108. ———— Decree of Appellate Court—Execution of decree for rent and cancellation of lease—Computation of time for payment from "date of decree" under Chota Nagpur Landlord and Tenant Act (Bengal Act I of 1879), s. 88.—A decree under s. 88 of the Chota Nagpur Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act (Bengal Act I of 1879) provided that, on failure of the defendant (tenant) to pay the amount due under the decree within fifteen days, his lease should be cancelled. An appeal preferred against the decree was dismissed, and the defendant paid the decretal amount within fifteen days of the date of the appellate decree. Some time after, the decree-holder applied for execution of the decree and cancellation of the lease. The application was rejected by the Court below. Held that in a case where the decree of the original Court was not executed pending the appeal to the higher Court, the words "date of the decree" in the latter part of s. 88 of Act I of 1879 ought to be read as the date of the final decree; that the decree of the Appellate Court was the final decree and the only decree capable of execution; and the payment of the decretal amount having been made within fifteen days of that decree, the application for execution was rightly disallowed. Noor Ali Chowdhuri v. 109. ——— Execution where appeal is brought—Copy of decree.—The application to execute the decree of an Appellate Court should be made to the Court which passed the first decree, upon or after the receipt by that Court of the copy of the decree certified by the Appellate Court; but quære whether execution should be allowed to issue upon a certified copy procured by the parties and presented to the Judge by petition. 110. ——— Agreement that evidence taken in one of analogous cases should be evidence in all—Appeal—Effect of reversal on those cases which were unappealable.—When the first of twelve suits against the same defendants was filed in the Recorder's Court at Rangoon, it was agreed between the parties, by their advocates in open Court, that all legal evidence to be taken in the first suit should be evidence in the rest. When the case came on for hearing, the advocate for the plaintiffs consented that the other cases should follow the finding of the Court in the first case, but the advocate for the defendant refused assent. Judgment was given in favour of the plaintiffs, and was also entered up in all the remaining cases. Defendant appealed from these decisions to the High Court, which reversed the Recorder's decision in the first case, and subsequently, without hearing argument, reversed the decisions in such (seven) of the eleven as were appealable. Held that the decrees passed by the Recorder's Court in the four unappealed suits were good decrees, on which execution could be issued in the usual form, provided they were not altered on review. NOA BIKH v. SHADDEN 9 W. R., 276

111. ——— Execution pending appeal—Landlord and tenant—Enhancement of rent—Decree for enhanced rent, and in default possession to be given—Possession taken pending appeal—Decree confirmed on appeal—Time for complying with decree—Application by defendants to be restored to possession on payment of amount ordered by appellate decree.—On the 13th February 1889, the plaintiffs obtained in the District Court of Satara a decree, on appeal against the defendants, who were their tenants, ordering them to pay Rs 34 as the rent of certain land for the year 1882-83; and Rs 50 a year as rent from the 5th April 1883, on which date the plaintiffs had given them notice of enhancement. In default of payment by the defendants, the plaintiffs were to take possession of the land. The plaintiffs were to give the defendants credit for any sums which they had paid as rent since the year 1882-83. Both parties appealed to the High Court from this decree. While these appeals were still pending, the plaintiffs, on the 13th February 1890, applied for execution of the decree. They prayed for immediate possession and for Rs 34

alleged to be the rent due under the decree, viz., Rs 34 for 1882-83, and Rs 50 for each of the six years from 1883-84 to 1888-89 inclusive. The application was granted by the Subordinate Judge, and the plaintiffs obtained possession on the 19th February 1890. On the 20th March 1890, the defendants applied to be restored to possession, stating that they had appealed to the High Court against the decree of the District Court, which had fixed their rent at the enhanced rate of Rs 50, and that their appeal was still pending; that the sum of Rs 34 was not due to the plaintiffs, inasmuch as they (the defendants) had continued to pay the rent at the old rate (viz., Rs 34) to the village officers together with the local fund cess Rs 2-3-0, being a total of Rs 3-2-0 for each of the six years. They contended that the plaintiffs were thus entitled only to Rs 3-4-0, and not Rs 34, and they claimed to get back the land on the ground that the plaintiffs had obtained possession on an illegal application. While this application of the 20th March 1890 was still pending, the appeals against the District Court's decree of the 13th February 1889 came on for hearing before the High Court, which confirmed that decree on the 17th July 1890. Thereupon the defendants, on the 1st August 1890, brought in the Court Rs 98 (being the difference between the old rent which they had paid and the enhanced rent payable under the confirmed decree), and applied to be restored to possession. On the 6th February 1891, the defendants' application of the 20th March 1890 came on for hearing, and was rejected by the Subordinate Judge on the ground that the defendants had not obeyed the District Court's decree. The defendants thereupon appealed to the District Court, which reversed that decision, and ordered that possession should be given to the defendants on the ground that the time for payment of the amount due under the decree should be reckoned from the date of the confirmation of the decree by the High Court, viz., 17th July 1890, and that by their payments made to the village officers and their payment into Court on the 1st August 1890 the defendants had obeyed the decree, and were entitled to be put back into possession. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court. Held (reversing the order of the District Court and restoring that of the Subordinate Judge) that the defendants could not recover possession. The fact that they had appealed to the High Court could not prevent the decree of the District Court from being executed, or enlarge the time for payment of the rent as decreed by that Court. No stay of execution was asked for, and all that the Subordinate Judge had to see in February 1890 was whether payment of rent had been made in accordance with the terms of the decree of the District Court made on the 13th February 1889. The defendants had not paid that rent when the plaintiffs executed the decree on the 19th February 1890. The decree was legally executed before the High Court's decree was passed on the 17th July 1890, and that execution could not be afterwards cancelled, because of the High Court's decree. When the decree of the District Court was passed, the defendants should at once have paid to the village officers the balance of the rent due according to that decree, or, on the second appeal to the High Court being made, they should have applied for stay of execution. They followed neither course, and the decree was legally executed. The claim in the plaintiffs' application for execution may have been excessive, but the defendants had never attempted to pay anything beyond the old rent. AMINABI v. SIDU 1 L. R., 17 Bom., 547

He accordingly caused "certain houses and buildings and some moveable properties" belonging to B to be attached. On an application by B to the High Court to set aside the attachment, Held that the Collector had no jurisdiction to attach the property. 116. — Collector, Power of—Act X of 1859.—A obtained a decree against B for arrears of rent. C was an under-tenant of B under an ijara lease. In executing A's decree against B, the Collector sold the "rights and profits of the debts due for rent" from C to B for the years 1273-4-5. A became the purchaser in a suit brought by D, as assignee of A, of rents alleged to be due for the years 1273-4-5. Held that for the purposes of Act X of 1859 rent is moveable property; and that the Collector, therefore, was competent to sell it in execution of the decree, and to effect the sale to A. MAHES CHANDRA CHATTAPADHYA v. GURUPRASAD ROY 5 B. L. R., 115; 13 W. R., 401

117. — Sale of under-tenure—Sale of other immovable property of judgment-debtor—Beng. Act VIII of 1859, s. 84 and ss. 59-61.—A judgment-creditor, who has obtained a decree for arrears of rent due in respect of an under-tenure transferable by its own title-deeds or by the custom of the country, is not bound to bring that under-tenure to sale in execution before he can proceed against other immovable property belonging to his judgment-debtor. The case of Desratulla v. Nazir Ali Khan, 1 B. L. R., A. C., 216, which was decided upon a 105 of Act X of 1859, is not applicable to ss. 59-61 of Bengal Act VIII of 1859. *Doulat Chand Sahoo v. Act VIII of 1869, ss. 22, 59.—In a suit for arrears of rent and for ejectment by a landlord against a tenant who had a right of occupancy in the holding transferable by sale, Held (MITTAL, J., doubting) that the tenant was not liable to ejectment, and that the landlord's only remedy was to sell the holding under the provisions of s. 59, Act VIII (B. S. 34 of that Act (introducing the procedure laid down in the Civil Procedure Code into rent-suits, "save as in Act VIII of 1869 otherwise provided") made no alteration in this respect, ss. 59-61 and s. 65 specially providing for such mode of execution. LALIT MOHUN ROY v. The provisions of s. 68 of Transfer of Property Act are not amongst those made applicable by s. 100 of that Act to a person having a charge within the meaning of the latter section. Semble—The "charge" referred to in s. 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885) is not such a "charge" as that defined by s. 100 of the Transfer of Property Act. Lalit Mohun Roy v. Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 65.—Where a landlord obtains a decree for rent against his tenant, which is on the face of it a decree for a sum of money without creating a charge upon the tenure, he is at liberty in execution to bring to sale property of his judgment-debtor other than the tenure itself. S. 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Acts creates a first charge upon the tenure for its rent, and puts the landlord in the position of a first mortgagee so far as the rent is concerned, but the tenant remains personally liable for the rent, so that the landlord has a charge upon the tenure for the rent, and he has a remedy against the tenant personally for the debt to him, and he has therefore a right to avail himself of either of these remedies. TARINIPRODAD ROY v. 124. ————— Subsequent execution against same property in hands of purchaser—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 61.—A judgment-creditor, having obtained two decrees, one for money, the other for the rent of certain tenures, sold his debtor's right and interest in the tenures in execution of his money-decree, and afterwards in execution of his decree for rent again put up for sale the same tenures. At the second sale, B became the purchaser of whatever could pass under such sale. A subsequently sued and obtained a decree against B for arrears of rent that had become due in respect of the said tenure since the last supposed sale to him, and in execution of such last-mentioned decree again attached the tenures. On the intervention of third parties, the tenures were released from attachment. A having applied to levy execution on other immovable properties of B, Held that, the tenures having been released from attachment, A was not entitled, under s. 61 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869, to proceed against the other immovable property of B, it being open to him to show by a regular suit that the tenures were liable to be sold in execution of his decree; and, further, that upon the facts of the case he had disentitled himself to any equitable relief. HURRISH CHUNDER ROY v. Rent Act XII of 1882, s. 98 (g).—In execution of a decree obtained by a lambardar under s. 98 (g) of the North-Western Provinces Rent Act, the decree-holder caused to be attached a certain share upon which the arrears of Government revenue which he had satisfied had accrued. In defence to a suit brought by certain purchasers of the same property from the judgment-debtors to have it declared that the property was not liable to sale under the decree and to remove the attachment, the decree-holder pleaded that by the fact of paying the arrears of revenue due on the estate of the plaintiffs' vendors he had obtained a charge on it, and could bring it to sale to satisfy the decree. Held that a charge of this nature could not be enforced in execution of a decree, which was merely a personal one, for arrears of Government revenue against persons against whom it was passed by a Revenue Court not competent to establish or enforce a charge on property or to do more than pass a personal decree, and whose powers in execution were confined to realization from personal and immoveable property of the judgment-debtors. *Nugender Chunder Ghose v. its omission to do so will invalidate the entire subsequent proceedings. A judgment having been obtained by A against B and B having died before application was made for execution, A applied for execution of his decree upon a tabular statement in which the judgment-debtor was stated to be C, widow of B, and C was also described as the person against whom execution was sought. Upon this application the property mentioned in the tabular statement was directed to be attached and sold, and it was accordingly sold in execution and purchased by A. No notice under s. 248 of the Civil Procedure Code had been served upon C before issue of execution. Held that the application was improper; that the order for attachment and sale should not have been made; and that the Court which made it should have set the execution aside as soon as it became aware that no notice had issued previous to its issue. The fact of there being in the Code of Civil Procedure no section expressly authorizing a Court to set aside its proceedings is immaterial, as every Court has an inherent right to see that its process is not abused or does not irregularly issue, and may set aside all irregular proceedings as a matter of course, provided that the interests of third parties are not affected. Semble—Under s. 248, the fact that application to execute the decree had been made in the lifetime of B would make no difference, unless an order had been made and the property actually attached under it: as whenever an application is made for execution against a legal representative of the judgment-debtor, the notice required by the section must be issued to him, unless the Court has already ordered execution to issue against him on a previous application. *IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF RAMSUREN DASS v. transferred to another Court for execution, and in June 1882 an application was made for execution; and shortly afterwards the Court to which the decree had been transferred sanctioned an agreement between the parties for satisfaction of the decree by instalments. In June 1885, an application was made to the Court which passed the decree to again transfer it for execution, and this application recited the previous agreement and certain payments which had been made, and it was granted. A further application for execution for the remaining instalments was made in April 1888. Held by EDGE, C.J., that the Court to which the decree was transferred had no power, in 1882, to sanction the agreement under s. 257A of the Civil Procedure Code; that if the order in June 1885 of the Court passing the decree were regarded as a sanction (which it would be very difficult to hold), that order nevertheless could not operate as one under s. 210 altering the decree; that if any decree in the case were capable of execution, it was the decree of 1871, which had never been altered by a Court; and that, inasmuch as a previous application for execution had been made in June 1882, that decree was dead, as well under s. 230 of the Code as under art. 179, sch. ii of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). Held by STRAIGHT, J., that the order of June 1885 was not, and could not be, an order sanctioning the agreement of June 1882, and the decree consequently stood unaltered; and, an application to execute it having been made and granted since Act XIV of 1882 came into operation, the decree was now dead under s. 230 of the Code. PER EDGE, C.J.—The Court to which a decree has been transferred for execution has no power to sanction an agreement under s. 257A of the Code for satisfaction of the decree by instalments, but such sanction can be given only by the Court which passed the decree. An agreement sanctioned under s. 257A cannot be treated, without anything more, as a decree of the Court, and cannot operate as an order under s. 210, though an order under s. 210 would operate as a sanction under s. 257A. The decree in a suit which must be executed is the decree as originally passed or as altered by a proper order for that purpose, as, e.g., by an order under s. 210. GANDHARAP SINGH v. 176. ———— Transfer to Collector Power of Collector—Withdrawal by transferring Court of transferred decree—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, ss. 320, 321.—A Collector, to whom a decree for sale of mortgaged property has been transferred for execution under s. 320 of the Civil Procedure Code, is limited to one of the three courses specified in s. 321, and may not depart from them; much less may he do what the Court itself could not do in such a case—allow payment of the debt to be made by instalments. A Collector, to whom a decree has been so transferred for execution, acts ministerially, and when he delegates his functions to an assistant or a manipulator, incurs a risk of having to answer in damages to the person who is by any error or mistake deprived of the fruits of his judgment; and this risk attaches independently of malice or negligence. The Court that has made a decree or judicial order, which has been transmitted to the Collector for execution, is not deprived of the judicial powers with respect to it which may still at any particular time be competent to such Court, and which it would have had had the order been placed in the hands of its own ordinary officer, the nasir. in execution took place, and the Collector gave the purchaser a certificate of the sale. Upon this certificate the purchaser applied to the Subordinate Judge to give him possession of a larger amount of property than that specified in the certificate, and, upon the refusal of the Court to do so, applied to the Collector to amend the certificate. The amendment having been made as desired, the purchaser again applied to the Subordinate Judge for possession of the amount claimed by him, and the Subordinate Judge again rejected the application, holding that only the lesser amount had been sold in execution of the decree. Held that, with reference to the second paragraph of Rule 19 of the Rules framed by the Local Government under s. 320 of the Civil Procedure Code, regarding the transmission, execution, and retransmission of decrees, and published in the North-Western Provinces and Oudh Gazette of the 4th September 1880, the matter of delivery to the purchaser was within the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge, notwithstanding the terms of s. 320, and notwithstanding the ruling of the Full Bench in *Madho Prasad v. Civil Procedure Code, ss. 320, 325—Decree transferred to the Collector for execution—Collector's duties and powers in execution—Civil Court's jurisdiction to revise Collector's proceedings in execution.—A decree was transferred to the Collector for execution. The Mamlatdar, under the orders of the Collector, put up for sale certain immoveable property belonging to the judgment-debtors. The sale was confirmed by the Mamlatdar with the sanction of the Collector. Some time afterwards the auction-purchaser applied to the Collector for a certificate of sale, but the Collector refused the certificate, and set aside the sale on the ground that the purchaser was a relative of the decree-holder, and had really purchased the property on his behalf without the permission of the Court. Against this proceeding of the Collector the purchaser made an application, first to the Subordinate Judge who had transferred the decree to the Collector for execution, and then to the District Court. But both Courts declined to entertain his application, on the ground of want of jurisdiction. Held, on an application to the High Court, that the Subordinate Judge had jurisdiction to deal with the application and to revise the Collector's proceedings in execution. Held also that the Collector, having through his subordinate put up for sale the judgment-debtor's property and confirmed the sale, had in that way completely executed the decree so far as he could, and was so far functus officio. His duty was to make a return to the Court of what he had done. After confirmation of the sale, he could not set it aside. Per WISE, J.—The Collector, like the Nazir in India, is a ministerial officer when he executes a decree. He, like the Nazir, must carry out the decree of a Civil Court in general subjection to the judicial direction of the Court on whose authority the coercive power exercised by him rests, and which alone can deal judicially with the questions that arise in execution. His proceedings and orders are subject, accordingly, to revision and correction on the application of a party aggrieved, whenever he misconceives the decree or acts illegally in giving effect to it. He is limited strictly to the precise line of activity laid down for him in the Code and the orders under it; and in cases of error or doubt it is the Court that must determine whether he, as its ministerial officer, has or has not transgressed his powers. Per BIRDWOOD, J.—A sale made by a Collector under Ch. XIX of the Civil Procedure Code is subject to confirmation by the Civil Court under s. 312. As soon as the Collector has exercised or performed the powers or duties conferred or imposed upon him by ss. 321 to 325 of the Code, he is functus officio. If he has sold the property or re-sold it under the power given by cl. (c) of s. 325, he has completed the execution of the decree so far as he can legally complete it, and it is then his duty to retransmit the decree to the Court, under rules prescribed in that behalf by Government under the second paragraph of s. 320. Where the property has been sold or re-sold, the sale or re-sale cannot be set aside by the Collector. Any application for setting it aside must be made to the Civil Court under s. 311, and dealt with by it under s. 312; and if no application is made to the Court, the sale must be confirmed by it under that section. LALLU TRIKAM v. Scheduled Districts—Execution of decrees passed by Court of Scheduled District in Court of a Regulation District—Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859), s. 284—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 223, 229—Scheduled Districts Act (XIV of 1874), s. 5.—On the 15th May 1876, a judgment-creditor obtained a decree in the Civil Court of the Chittagong Hill Tracts, which are included amongst the Scheduled Districts, and on or about the 15th May 1876, at his instance, it was sent with a certificate of non-satisfaction to the Court of a Munsif in the Regulation District of Chittagong for execution. After sundry unsuccessful attempts to execute the decree, an application was made on the 17th September 1886 for its execution. The judgment-debtor objected that under s. 229 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) the Munsif's Court had no jurisdiction to execute the decree, as it could only act under that section, and the Code had never been extended to the Chittagong Hill Tracts. Held that, as at the time the decree was passed and sent to the Munsif for execution Act VIII of 1859 was in force, and by s. 284 of that Act the judgment-creditor had a right to have his decree sent to any Civil Court for execution, he was entitled now to have it executed, as neither Act X of 1877 or XIV of 1882 by express words or implication deprived him of that right. Held, further, that the intention of the Legislature was, with regard to decrees obtained in scheduled districts after the Code of 1877 came into force, that such decrees should not be executed by Courts in British India unless and until, under the provisions of s. 6 of the Scheduled Districts Act (XIV of 1874), the Government had issued the notification therein referred to applying to the scheduled districts such portion of the Code of Civil Procedure as they thought proper to apply. Quære—Whether a decree passed by a Court in a scheduled district and sent for execution to a Court in a regulation district after Act X of 1877 came into force can be executed by the latter Court in the absence of such a notification extending the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure to the scheduled districts. KASHI MONUM BORUA v. Before the sale another suit, instituted in the same Court for the purpose of having other property substituted in lieu of part of that mortgaged, was transferred to the Court of the District Judge, who decreed, upon consent, that the substituted property should be sold, and that, for the purpose of this sale, this suit should be taken as supplemental to the former one. On the petition of the mortgagee for execution of the decrees, in both suits, in the District Court, it was objected that execution could not proceed therein, on the ground that the decree for sale was that of the Subordinate Court. Held that the decree (which affected the whole property mortgaged) was that of the District Court, which accordingly had jurisdiction to execute it. To have enabled the Subordinate Court so to do, an order by the District Court would have been necessary. Matter which had no bearing on the question raised on this appeal having been introduced into the record, it was ordered that all such costs as might have been so occasioned should be disallowed by the Registrar, on the taxation of costs. BISHENMUN SINGH v. The Court of such a Subordinate Judge which passed a mortgage-decree is therefore the only Court competent to entertain an application for the execution of the decree and to make an order in furtherance thereof, even when the execution is sought by the sale of property other than the mortgaged property lying within the district, but outside the area assigned to it by the District Judge. *HACHU KOER v. Notice having been issued to the defendant under s. 248 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) calling upon him to show cause why execution should not issue against him, he appeared and applied to be allowed to pay the judgment-debt by instalments, alleging that he was an agriculturist, and pleading his inability to pay in a lump sum. The plaintiff denied that the defendant was an agriculturist. The Subordinate Judge raised an issue as to whether the defendant was an agriculturist, and, having after enquiry found the issue in the affirmative, was of opinion that the decree should be considered a nullity and should not be executed, inasmuch as the defendant being an agriculturist, the Court of Small Causes had no jurisdiction to pass it. On reference to the High Court,—Held that the Subordinate Judge was not competent to question the validity of the Small Cause Court decree, his duty being confined to enforcing it, on the "presentation of a copy of it and certificate," as provided by s. 20 of Act XI of 1865. Nor could he take any notice of the status of the defendant as an agriculturist. The only course open to the defendant was to apply to the Small Cause Court for a review

Transfer of execution-proceedings by District Judge from one Small Cause Court to subordinate Court—Civil Procedure Code Amendment Act (VI of 1892), s. 4—Rateable distribution—Civil Procedure Code (1882), ss. 25, 223 (d), 295, and 647—District Judge, Power of—Subordinate Judge, Power of.—A District Judge has power under s. 25 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), or under that section read with s. 647, to transfer execution-proceedings in a Small Cause Court to the Court of a Subordinate Judge. The ruling in the case of Balaji Ranchoddas v. Mohantal Dalsukram, I. L. R., 5 Bom., 680, that these sections apply to execution-proceedings in Small Cause Courts, is not affected by the explanation to s. 4 of Act VI of 1892. Execution-proceedings under a decree against A in a Small Cause Court were transferred by a District Judge to a Subordinate Judge's Court where execution was proceeding against A under another decree, and it was objected that, as by the concluding paragraph of s. 25 of the Civil Procedure Code the attachments under the two decrees would be in different Courts, s. 295 of the Code would not apply, and rateable distribution could not be granted. Held that the last paragraph of s. 25 did not convert the Subordinate Judge's Court into a Small Cause Court, but only provided for the trial of the suit, which had been transferred, being conducted by the Subordinate Judge's Court as a Small Cause suit. Quære—Whether a Subordinate Judge, under cl. Execution of a decree of the Agent for Sirdars—Rights of transferees of a decree—Jurisdiction.—A in 1839 obtained a decree against B, a Sirdar, in the Court of the Agent for Sirdars. The decree was executed in the Agent's Court until B's death in 1868. B's status as a Sirdar under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Agent did not descend to his sons, and the decree was transferred to the Court of the first class Subordinate Judge at Ahmednagar for execution. Various objections were taken to the execution of the decree by that Court, but none on the ground that the Agent's decree could not be executed by a mere transfer to an ordinary Civil Court. The case went up twice to the High Court, under whose orders the execution was for several years continued in favour of A's representatives against the estate of B's sons. In 1885, one of A's representatives assigned his interest under the decree to C and D. Thereupon the transferees, C and D, applied to the first class Subordinate Judge at Ahmednagar to have their names substituted in the place of the transferor in the execution-proceedings. The Subordinate

Judge rejected this application on the ground that execution had been going on for several years contrary to the ruling in Khusaldas v. Sakharam Ramchandra, 12 Bom., 212, which laid down that the Agent's decree could not be executed by a mere transfer to an ordinary Court, the remedy in such cases being by a suit on the decree. On this ground also he refused to recognize the transfer of the decree. Held that, though the execution-proceedings in this case had been for many years irregularly conducted by a mere transfer of the Agent's decree to an ordinary Civil Court, still, as the Court which carried on the execution had jurisdiction to grant the same relief if a suit had been brought upon the decree, the irregularity, having been acquiesced in, did not vitiate the former proceedings in execution. VISHNU SAKHARAM NAGARKAR v. —Certificate of non-execution.—A money-decree was made by the Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs against a mortgagor who was possessed of property in the 24-Pergunnahs, and also of an estate called Kismut Kosdaha, 18 mouzaha of which lay in Zillah 24-Pergunnahs and 43 mouzaha in Zillah Nudda. The whole estate was entered in the tauji of, and the Government revenue was payable in, the Collectorate of Nudda. The Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs, without selling the property of the judgment-debtor which was within his jurisdiction, transmitted a certificate under s. 285 of the Civil Procedure Code to the Judge of Nudda, stating that no portion of the amount of the decree had been realized by the Court of the 24-Pergunnahs. Thereupon Kismut Kosdaha was attached and sold by order of the Nudda Court. In a suit brought against the purchaser for possession of the 18 mouzaha lying in the 24-Pergunnahs by a person who claimed to have bought the right, title, and interest of the judgment-debtor in those mouzaha, but who, in fact, was not the real purchaser,—Held that, although the Court of the 24-Pergunnahs strictly ought not to have granted the certificate until the property in the 24-Pergunnahs had been sold, the error in so doing did not make the certificate void, or avoid the proceeding in the Nudda Court, Kismut Kosdaha being substantially in the Nudda District.

Dinonath Mullick, 11 B. L. R., 56: 19 W. R., 434, was decided, that the sale was not necessarily limited only to the portion of the property situate in the Munsif of Serajgunge, but that that Court might have jurisdiction to make a valid sale of the whole estate, although it might be more

UZIR MAHOMED . . . 23 W. R., 233

221. — Power of Munsif to attach and sell property, part of which is out of his jurisdiction.—Where a Munsif orders the attachment and sale of a talukh, part of which lies outside the jurisdiction of his Court, the order is, as regards this latter portion, a nullity, and an attachment and a sale pursuant to the order are void. The order of a Court which is not empowered to make any order at all does not stand on the same footing as an erroneous order by a Court empowered to deal with the subject-matter of that order. The failure to object to a sale, if the Court had no power at all to hold it, does not make the confirmation thereof conclusive. The limitation of the remedy by separate suit contained in Act VIII of 1859, s. 257, applies to cases where a Court acts wrongfully within its jurisdiction, and not to cases where a Court has gone wholly out of its jurisdiction. Kally Prosonno Bose v. IV, form 128—Jurisdiction.*—A decree obtained in a suit brought under the provision of s. 19 of the Code of Civil Procedure in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Rajshahye on a mortgage of certain properties situated in the districts and jurisdictions of Rajshahye and Nyadumka directed that the properties mentioned in the mortgage should be sold and the proceeds applied in payment of the mortgage-debt. The properties were sold by the Court of Rajshahye. Held that the authority given by s. 19 of the Code included an authority to make the order for the sale of the properties, and that the Rajshahye Court was within its jurisdiction in directing and carrying out the sale. Quere—Whether, where a sale takes place under a money-decree of property partly within the local limits of the Court whose decree is being executed, and partly without that Court's jurisdiction, the sale of the property without the jurisdiction would be valid and binding in consequence of the provisions of ss. 19 and 223 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Per GHOSH, J.—S. 223 of the Code of Civil Procedure merely provides that, when it may be necessary for a Court to send a decree for execution to another Court by reason of the property being situate beyond its local jurisdiction, it ought to do so; and the words of sub-s. (c), "sale of immoveable property situate without the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court which passed it," contemplate a case where the whole of the property, and not any portion of it, is situate beyond the local limits of the Court which passes the decree. MASEYK v. STEEL & CO. I. L. R., 14 Cal., 661

224. ----- Sale of property covered by decree by Court which passed decree when property is situate outside its local jurisdiction at time of application—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1892), s. 223 (c)—Jurisdiction.—A mortgage-decree was passed directing the sale of certain property wholly situate within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree. After the decree, the district within which the property was situate was transferred and placed under the local jurisdiction of another Court. The judgment-debtor then applied to the first Court for execution of the decree, and thereupon the judgment-debtor objected that that Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the application or to direct the sale of the property. Held that that Court had authority to execute its own decree and bring the property to sale. Held, further, that s. 223 (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure does not curtail the power of a Court to execute its own decree, but gives it a discretion either to execute the decree itself or, on the application of the decree-holder, to send it to another Court for execution, and thereby

225. ----- Power of Court passing decree to execute it—Portion of property out of jurisdiction—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1892), s. 223.—The Court that has the power to pass a decree for sale of a property has also power to carry out its decree by selling that property, whether any portion of that property be within the local limits of its jurisdiction or not. Per GHOSH, J.—S. 223, cl. (c), of the Civil Procedure Code leaves it to the discretion of the Court to send the decree for execution to the Court having local jurisdiction. Maseyk v. Steel & Co., I. L. Doybaki Nandan Sen, I. L. R., 13 Cal., 13, followed. Prem Chand Dey v. Mokkoda Debi, I. L. R., 17 Cal., 699, distinguished. TINCOURI DEBYA v. SHIB CHANDRA PAL CHOWDHURY [I. L. R., 21 Cal., 639]

227. ----- Attachment of assets of a judgment-debtor outside the jurisdiction of the attaching Court—Procedure.—The plaintiff, having obtained a decree against the defendant in the Court at Bhusaval, sought to execute it by attaching a moiety of the defendant's pay. The defendant was a sorter in the Railway Mail Service, and travelled between Bhusaval and Nagpur, at which latter place he resided and received his pay. By an order of attachment issued, at the plaintiff's instance, by the Bhusaval Court to the defendant's disbursing officer at Nagpur, a moiety of the defendant's pay having been withheld by that officer, the defendant applied to the Bhusaval Court to cancel the order, contending that it was illegal, as neither he nor his disbursing officer resided at Bhusaval. On reference to the High Court, Held that the order of attachment was ultra vires, as neither the defendant nor his disbursing officer resided within the jurisdiction of the Bhusaval Court. The proper procedure was to send the decree of the Bhusaval Court for execution to Nagpur, where the disbursing officer resided, and where the defendant's pay was available for satisfaction of the decree. *RANGO JAIRAM v. 10. DECREES OF COURTS OF NATIVE STATES.

230. ———— Foreign judgment—Execution in British India of foreign judgment—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 229A and B and 245B—Decree obtained without jurisdiction and by fraud—Jurisdiction.—The plaintiff obtained a decree against the defendant in the Zillah Court of Angikarnal, in the State of Cochin. The defendant was a resident in Bombay, and the plaintiff sought to execute the decree against him in Bombay. Notice under s. 245B of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) was served upon the defendant calling upon him to show cause why he should not be committed to jail in execution. The plaintiff relied upon s. 229B of the Civil Procedure Code. The defendant, as cause against the execution of the decree, alleged that the decree was passed by the Cochin Court without jurisdiction, and that it had been fraudulently obtained by the plaintiff. The Court refused to commit the defendant. Held, on the facts as presented in the affidavit, that the Court in Cochin had no jurisdiction over the defendant, and that the plaintiff obtained the decree by misrepresentation and concealment of essential facts. Held also that the Court was entitled to exercise a judicial discretion as to whether it would put into force the provisions of s. 229B of the Civil Procedure Code. No duty is cast upon the Court to execute a decree which can be shown to have been passed without jurisdiction or obtained by fraud. S. 229B of the Civil Procedure Code does not remove the decree of a Native State falling within its purview from the category of foreign judgments. It merely alters the procedure by which such a judgment can have effect given to it in British India. Notwithstanding the section, such a decree still remains a foreign judgment, and its effect is removed by showing want of jurisdiction in the Court which passed it. The Court is not bound to execute the decree of a foreign Court which has been obtained by the fraud of the plaintiff. Where execution of such a decree is sought, relief can only be obtained by pointing out the fraud to the executing Court and asking that Court to refrain from executing the decree. The Court will not send British subjects subject to its territorial jurisdiction into a foreign country to seek to be relieved from a fraudulently obtained decree, but will itself refuse to give effect to such a decree. MUSA HAJI AHMED v. 237. — Former mode of execution in High Court. Practice of High Court—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 250.—The practice of the High Court under the Civil Procedure Code, on the execution of decrees for money, either against immovable or movable estate, has been, in the first instance, to issue a writ of attachment, and subsequently, on its return by the Sheriff duly executed, to issue a writ directing a sale. The writ of f. fa. which issued from the Supreme Court was an authority to the Sheriff not only to seize, but also to sell. S. 250 of the Civil Procedure Code applied neither to executions against immovable property nor to executions against debts due to the defendant; and in order to give to third parties full opportunity of vindicating their right before sale and also to give the defendant an opportunity of paying, it has not been usual to issue process of attachment and sale simultaneously even against personal property, and it would not seem to be proper to do so, except under special circumstances. FINANCIAL ASSOCIATION OF INDIA AND CHINA v. XIX of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882) apply. S. 267 of the Civil Procedure Code is applicable to all the property of the judgment-debtor out of which the decree can be satisfied either by delivery in obedience to the decree or by sale. The words "liable to be seized" contained in s. 267 of the Civil Procedure Code are words of description pointing out the kind of property in respect of which an enquiry can be held, viz., any property which is attachable under the decree. Property of a judgment-debtor which he has mortgaged is prima facie liable to be seized in execution of a decree against him, and the fact that he has mortgaged it will not prevent its being attached and sold in execution of the decree subject to the mortgage-debt. The decree also awarded mesne profits from the date of the institution of the suit. In 1884 the plaintiff sought in execution of this decree to recover his share of the profits of the village for the years 1882-83 and 1883-84. Held that the plaintiff could not proceed to enforce his rights under the decree by way of execution. His remedy was by a suit on the right established by the decree. The decree had merely declared the right of the plaintiff to a certain share of produce, and payment was ordered of mesne profits computed according to certain principles. Such an award was not an award of a periodical payment in eternum. The very word "mesne" implied a terminus ad quem as well as a quo, and in the absence of a special order the terminus was the date of the decree. VINAYAK AMBIT DESHPANDE v. ABASI HAIDATRAY to date of realization. Held that the condition in favour of the defendant was not a decree, and could not be treated as such so as to be capable of being put in execution. RAMANAGRA SINGH v. RAMYAD SINGH [5 C. L. R., 176

270. — Decree against joint immovable property—Sale of undivided share.—Where an execution-debtor is jointly interested with another person in immovable property which the execution-creditor seeks to sell in execution of his decree, the ordinary procedure for a Court executing the decree to adopt is to put up for sale the right, title, and interest of the judgment-debtor in his undivided share of the property to be sold. MATHURADAS GOVARDHANDAS v. FATHAULKA BEGAM [5 Bom., A. C., 68

271. — Decree naming no specific shares.—In execution of a decree which merely declared that the right of a judgment-debtor in certain property extended to two-thirds of it, the lower Court divided the property before selling the debtor's share. Held that, as the decree did not specify that any particular portion of the property belonged to the debtor as his share, his right, title, and interest in the property could only be sold, and that the determination of this right must be left for future adjudication between the purchaser and the co-sharer of the debtor, unless an arrangement could be arrived at. ATMARAM KALIANANDAS v. 272. — Family dwelling-house—Joint property—Act VIII of 1859, s. 224.—A decree-holder purchased, in execution of his decree, the right, title, and interest of the judgment-debtor, a member of a joint Hindu family, in the family dwelling-house and land attached. Held per NORMAN, TREVOR, LOCH, and BAYLEY, JJ.—That s. 224 of Act VIII of 1859 did not apply; that A was entitled to actual possession of the share of his judgment-debtor in the house as well as in the land, but his share must be marked out so as to cause the least possible inconvenience to the other members of the family. Per KEMP, J.—An equivalent in value of the share in the house should be apportioned to him out of the land, which greatly exceeded the dwelling-house in value. BIJOI KESAL ROY v. 276. Decree against an undivided brother—Mortgage of joint property.—A, an undivided member of a Hindu family, mortgaged part of the family property by way of conditional sale to B, to secure a loan. B having sued A personally for the amount due, A admitted the mortgage and said he would surrender the property in discharge of the debt, and a decree was passed accordingly. A's undivided brothers intervened in execution. Held that the decree, not being passed against the joint family or its representative, and not describing the property which it directed to be delivered to the plaintiff by way of absolute sale to be family property, could not be executed against the family property. GURUVAPPA v. 279. Joint Hindu family—Simple money-decree against father alone sought to be executed after his death against joint family property in the hands of the son.—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 284 and 244.—A creditor of a father in a joint Hindu family governed by the law of the Mitakshara, who has obtained a simple decree for money in a suit against the father alone, cannot obtain execution of that decree against the joint family property or any part of it in the hands of the son in a proceeding against the son in execution of that decree instituted after the death of the father, and not being a proceeding in continuation of an attachment of the property effected during the lifetime of the father; the proceeding in execution not being barred by the law of limitation, and the son not being precluded by any estoppel from proving that the property was joint family property at the time of his father's death, and is in his hands ancestral property, and not assets representing what was at the time of his father's death separate property of his father. But in such a case, if the creditor desires to obtain a remedy against the ancestral property or any part of it in the hands of the son, he must seek that remedy in a suit against the son, in answer to which suit, when brought, the son will be entitled to prove that the suit is barred by limitation, that the debt was tainted by immorality, or any other matter that would be a defence against the son. Suraj Bansi Koer v. death of the father—Ancestral property in the hands of the son—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 234.—A money-decree obtained against the father of an undivided Hindu family can be executed after his death against his sons to the extent of the ancestral property that has come into their hands even if the debt has been incurred for the sole purposes of the father, provided that it is not tainted with immorality or illegality. be regarded as a charge on the family estate, or the decree treated as a decree against the managing member of the family for the time being. A, the widow of an undivided member of a joint Hindu family, obtained a decree for maintenance against B, the brother of her deceased husband, not expressed to be a decree against the head or representative of the joint family. B died, and C, his son, having been brought in as his representative, resisted the execution of the decree by attachment of the family estate. Held that the family estate was not liable. Per Cur.—In a regular suit, C might clearly be held liable to pay maintenance to A, and a decree might be passed against him; but in execution proceedings the decree must be taken as it stands and executed against the son as his legal representative in the mode prescribed by s. 234 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and it is not open to extend the scope of the decree in such proceedings. *Karpakambal v. The minor died, and in 1897 his widow, Sundri, as his heir, applied for execution of the decree, claiming seventy maunds of paddy, being the amount due at the rate specified in the decree. Held that in execution of the decree she was only entitled to recover the arrears of the allowance up to the date of her husband's death. When he died, he was still a minor, and the allowance ceased, and the share went to his heirs by right of inheritance, and was recoverable only by a separate suit, and not in execution. LAKSHMAN DAKRU v. (m) MARRIED WOMEN.

290. ———— Liability of married women—Arrest—Stridhan.—R, as surety for her husband, joined with him in executing a bond for Rs. 90. In a suit brought upon the bond, a decree was passed against both. R was arrested in execution of the decree, and brought before the Court. She was then asked if she desired to apply to be declared an insolvent under the insolvency sections of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), but, not doing so, she was committed to jail. Subsequently, however, she applied to be declared an insolvent, but her application was rejected. She then claimed to be released, on the ground of her coverture. The Judge rejected her application as being too late. On reference to the High Court, Held that, although the decree was absolute in its terms and contained no express intimation of R's liability, nevertheless the law being clear that she could only be liable to the extent of her stridhan, it was to be assumed that the direction to pay, contained in the decree, had reference to that fund only. IN RE THE PETITION OF ADRI

291. ———— Decree on mortgage—Collateral security—Money-decree on bond.—The defendants mortgaged certain property in the mofussil to the plaintiffs in April 1868, and at the same time, as a collateral security to the mortgage, executed a bond in favour of the plaintiffs and a warrant of attorney to enter up judgment on the bond. Judgment was entered up, and a decree obtained thereon soon after the bond was executed. In accordance with a covenant in the mortgage-deed, the mortgagees entered into possession and receipt of the rents and profits of the estate, which they were authorized to receive for five years from the date of the mortgage. They remained in possession for six years, and then, more than one year having elapsed since any proceedings in execution had been taken, they applied for execution of their decree against the mortgaged property. The property was out of the jurisdiction of the Court. Held that, if the application were granted, the execution of the decree must be limited to property other than that which was the subject of the mortgage. There being evidence to show that the parties had entered into an agreement for a fresh mortgage of the property for twenty-two years, the application for execution was refused. JWAIANATH KUNDU CHOWDREY v. GOBINDMANI DASI . . . 4 B. L. R., O. C., 88

292. ———— Decree establishing a mortgage and directing sale—Attachment.—In order to enforce a decree which establishes a mortgage and directs a sale of the mortgaged premises in satisfaction of the mortgage, it is not necessary to issue an attachment. If the decree contains, as it ought to contain, a direction for sale of the mortgaged premises, the proceeding under such a decree by attachment is unnecessary as well as expensive and dilatory. The direction for sale in the decree is in itself sufficient authority for the sale. That direction is founded on the specific lien or charge on the mortgaged premises created by the contract of mortgage, and not on the execution clauses in the Codes of Civil Procedure. DAYACHAND v. HEMCHAND DHARAMCHAND . . . I. L. R., 4 Bom., 515

293. ———— Decree for enforcement of mortgage—Execution limited to mortgaged property—Equity.—K brought to sale in execution of a simple decree for money which he held against P certain property, and purchased it himself. The property was subject to a mortgage at the time it was sold. Subsequently a decree was obtained against P enforcing this mortgage, of which K became the holder. K sought to have this decree executed, not against the mortgaged property, but against other property belonging to P. Held that, if K purchased the property knowing that it was mortgaged, or if in consequence of the mortgage he purchased it for a less sum than it would otherwise have fetched, it would be inequitable to allow him to obtain satisfaction of the decree out of the other property of P. GULAB SINGH v. Act VII of 1868—Surplus sale-proceeds—Attachment of surplus sale-proceeds.*—The purchaser of property sold subject to the incumbrances thereon at a sale under Bengal Act VII of 1868 subsequently became the purchaser of a decree passed prior to the sale in a suit upon a mortgage of the property, such decrees being declared not only a charge on the mortgaged property, but also personal against the mortgagor. Held that the purchaser was not entitled to execute the decree against the surplus sale-proceeds under such sale, although he abandoned his lien on the property. *GOLUK CHUNDER MAHITA v. 296. — Decree against mortgaged property—Liability of judgment-debtor to arrest under such decree—Decree not to be extended in execution beyond its terms.—A decree cannot be extended in execution beyond the real meaning of its terms. A decree obtained on a mortgage directed that the judgment-debtor should pay the sum adjudged out of the property mortgaged. After executing the decree against the mortgaged property, the decree-holder made an application for execution against the person of the judgment-debtor. A notice was issued calling upon him to show cause why execution should not be further proceeded with. But the notice did not give him any intimation of the application for the arrest of his person. He did not appear, and, in his absence, an order was made for his personal arrest; but the order was not executed, as the decree-holder did not pay the process fee. Subsequently a fresh application was made for execution against the person of the judgment-debtor. Held that, as the decree merely provided for the satisfaction of the judgment-debt out of the property mortgaged, the decree could not be executed against the person of the judgment-debtor. *BUDAN v. 299. — Mortgage by owner of undivided share of estate—Rights of mortgagees on partition where share is allotted to a sharer other than the mortgagor.—Land having been granted to several persons jointly, disputes arose among them with reference to its allotment. The disputes having been settled by arbitration, one of the grantees sold his share to the plaintiff. Before the arbitration, another of the grantees mortgaged seven acres of the land to A, who did not become a party to the arbitration. A subsequently obtained a decree on his mortgage, and proceeded to execute it by attachment. The plaintiff intervened in execution, but in 1884 the Court passed an order stating that the plaintiff's land was not attached, and in fact his possession then remained undisturbed. A subsequently executed his decree, and purchased the land brought to sale by the Court. The plaintiff's possession was disturbed under colour of his purchase, and he now sued in 1889 to recover the land sold to him. Held that A could not execute his decree against the share sold to the plaintiff, but was limited in execution to the share allotted to his mortgagor: the plaintiff's vendor had therefore, after the arbitration, a good title against both A and his mortgagor, and the plaintiff was entitled to recover. *Hem Chunder Ghosh v. shares. The mortgagee brought his suit on the mortgage, joining as defendants the younger children as well as the mortgagors, and obtained a decree, whereby the mortgage amount was made payable "on the responsibility of the shares" of the co-mortgagors; the suit was otherwise dismissed, and no personal decree was passed. Subsequently the shares of the co-mortgagors were increased by inheritance from one of the other defendants who died before the decree was executed. Held that the increased shares of the mortgagors were liable to be sold in execution of the decree. ALI MUHAMMAD SAHIB v. On the 27th July 1898, the mortgagee applied for an order absolute for sale. On the 11th October 1898, the mortgagor applied for permission to pay into Court the amount of the decree. Held that the application could not be granted. The case fell within ss. 88 and 89, and not within s. 87 or 93, of the Transfer of Property Act. The money not having been paid within the appointed time, the Court was bound to pass an order absolute for sale; it had no power to enlarge the time for payment. Nandram v. Babaji, I. L. 303. ————— Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 88, 90—Decree unsatisfied by sale of mortgaged property—Right to decree for sale of other than mortgaged property.—The holder of a decree on mortgage obtained an order under s. 88 of the Transfer of Property Act for sale of the mortgaged property, and the proceeds of this, when sold, being insufficient to satisfy the decree, he applied for a decree under s. 90 for the sale of other properties belonging to the judgment-debtor. The Subordinate Judge refused the application on the ground that there was no such provision in the order for sale under s. 88. Held that the decree-holder was entitled to the decree asked for. The terms of s. 90 contemplate a decree in the suit for recovery of the mortgage-money after sale of the mortgaged properties under a decree given under s. 88. The decree-holder can then apply to the Court, and if he can show that, after the sale of the mortgaged properties, there is still a balance due to him under the decree obtained under s. 88, and that amount is legally recoverable from the judgment-debtor, he can ask for and obtain a decree under s. 90 for realization of the balance from other properties of the debtor. SONATUN SHAW v. 305. ————— Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 90—Execution of decree—Mortgaged property sold in execution of a decree held by a different mortgagee—S. 90 not applicable.—In order to make the remedy provided by s. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act available, it is necessary that the mortgaged property should have been sold in execution of the decree held by the person applying for a further decree under s. 90. S. 90 does not apply where the mortgaged property has been sold under a decree held by some other person. Muhammad Akbar v. 307. ————— Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 90—Nature of decree contemplated by that section.—The plaintiff obtained a decree on a hypothecation-bond, the decree providing that the money secured by the bond was to be realized by sale of the hypothecated property, and, if that proved insufficient to satisfy the decree, by sale of other property of the judgment-debtor. The hypothecated property was sold, and the proceeds were not sufficient to satisfy the decree. The decree-holder thereupon applied for enforcement of that portion of the decree which related to the other property of the judgment-debtor. To this application it was objected that it was necessary to obtain a decree under s. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act. This objection was allowed, and the decree-holder applied for and obtained a decree under the said section. The judgment-debtor then appealed against that decree on the ground, amongst others, that, looking to the terms of the original decree, the application under s. 90 was superfluous. Held that the decree contemplated by s. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act is, in fact, an order to be obtained in execution of a decree for sale; and though in the present instance the application for such a decree may have been superfluous, it may nevertheless be regarded as an application for execution of a decree by enforcement of a portion of it against property other than the mortgaged property. *Miller v. 310. ———— Transfer of Property Act, s. 90—Meaning of the term "legally recoverable."—A decree-holder having obtained separate decrees against his judgment-debtor on two unregistered bonds, each for a sum of less than Rs. 100, hypothecating one and the same property, took out execution on one bond and brought to sale the hypothecated property, which was purchased by a third party. The sum for which that property was sold was only sufficient to satisfy one decree, and the decree-holder accordingly, within three years from the date when the latter of the two bonds fell due, applied for a decree under s. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act. Held that, under the above circumstances, there was a balance legally recoverable otherwise than out of the property sold, and that the decree-holder was therefore entitled to a decree under s. 90. *Musahib Zaman Khan v. Before execution of that decree, some of the mortgaged property was taken up by Government under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, 1870. The mortgagees never put in any claim with regard to the mortgaged property in response to the notification made under s. 9 of the last-mentioned Act, but subsequently sought to attach in the hands of the Collector the compensation money about to be paid to the mortgagor. On these facts, it was held that the mortgagees were not entitled to attach such money in execution of their decree under the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. Their remedy was to proceed against the mortgaged property not taken up, and if the proceeds of sale of that were insufficient, then to apply to the Court under s. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act for a decree for the balance. *BABA MAL v. carry future interest. The judgment-debtor did not pay within the specified time, and subsequently the decree-holder applied for an order absolute for sale under s. 89 of the above-mentioned Act. Held that the amount which could be realized by the decree-holder by sale of the mortgaged property would include future interest from the date of the decree under s. 88 to the date of sale, and that it was not necessary that specific mention of future interest should be contained in the order under s. 89 of the Act. *RAJ KUMAR v. 318. ———— Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 90—Personal covenant in mortgage to pay—Application to sell non-hypothecated property—"Balance legally recoverable"—Cause of action—Limitation.—A mortgage-bond securing a debt payable on demand provided that for the payment of the amount of the mortgage-debt the immovable property mentioned in it should be held as collateral security, and that, "in case of this hypothecated property being insufficient for the satisfaction of the entire amount of the bond, the creditors would be at liberty to realize the amount remaining due from the obligors personally and from their other property." Held that no separate cause of action for the personal remedy accrued after the mortgaged property was found on sale to be insufficient to satisfy the mortgage-debt, but that the cause of action for both remedies was one and the same, and accrued when the covenant to pay was broken. Hence, the suit for sale of the mortgaged property having been brought more than ten years after the date of the mortgage, the balance due upon the mortgage was not legally recoverable otherwise than out of the property sold, and an application for a decree under s. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act was not maintainable. *Musakeb Zaman Khan v. The Court, in executing the decree, placed the decree-holder in joint possession of the two plots to the extent of the one-fourth share decreed to him, but declined to remove the trees until the said share had been specifically ascertained and partitioned by the Collector in reference to s. 265 of the Civil Procedure Code. Held that the decree could not be understood to entitle the plaintiff to remove the trees from a larger area than that to which he was entitled under that decree; and that, so long as that area remained joint and unascertained, the plaintiff could not execute the decree in the manner sought. Held also that the decree in the present case could not be called a "decree for the partition or for the separate possession of a share of an undivided estate paying revenue to Government" within the meaning of s. 265 of the Civil Procedure Code, so as to require the intervention of the Collector for the purpose of executing the decree; and that the Court of first instance, in order to meet the exigencies of the decree, should have separated the one-fourth to which the plaintiff was declared entitled, and, in executing the decree, should have ordered that the trees standing on the one-fourth area should be uprooted. *RAM DAYAL v. When she sought to execute the decree, the defendants objected that she ought first to execute it in respect of the lands in her possession which were alleged to exceed the one-third decree. Held that the decree-holder was entitled to execute her decree in respect of the lands in the hands of the defendant. *RAJHA KRISTO PANJAH v. The mere formal delivery of possession cannot of itself effect such dispossession unless the deprivation of possession be complete as a fact, a conclusion which the Court has to form on the whole of the evidence. 340. — Decree for possession of a village—Right of the holders of such a decree to the possession of village account books and other papers relating to the management of the village—Title-deeds.—The plaintiffs, as managers of a temple, obtained a decree for the possession of a certain inam village. After taking possession of the village, they called upon the defendants to hand over to them the village account books and other documents relating to the management of the village. The defendants refused. Thereupon the plaintiffs presented a darkhast in execution, praying (inter alia) for the delivery of those books and documents. The Subordinate Judge rejected this application on the ground that it was beyond the terms of the decree. Held, on appeal to the High Court, that the plaintiffs were entitled to the possession of the account books and documents in question, as being essential to the proper and effectual enjoyment and management of the village awarded by the decree. Such books and documents were properly to be regarded as accessory to the estate and as claimable by those to whom it had been awarded. The title-deeds of an estate, counterpart leases, and other documents of the like kind, such as kabuliate in India, ought to be regarded as accessory to the estate, and to pass with it, whether the transfer is made by a conveyance, a decree, or a certificate of sale. *BHAWANI DEVI v. (r) PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

341. — Decree against principal and surety—Interest.—E sued M, B, C, and P for money due for goods supplied. Separate solehnamas were filed by each of the four defendants, in which they admitted the debt, and each undertook to pay one-fourth thereof, with interest, by instalments; and each further agreed that, if the other three should make default and the amount due by them should not be realized by the sale of their property, then he should be liable to make good the deficiency. A decree was passed by the Court in accordance with the terms of the solehnamas. C and P each paid up their fourth shares, but M and B having failed to pay, E applied for execution against C and P in respect of the liability of M and B. Held that, in the absence of proof that the whole property of B had been exhausted, E's application could not be allowed. Where a decree for payment of a certain sum with interest was passed against certain defendants as principal debtors and against other defendants as sureties, and it appeared that the decree-holder had allowed time to the principal debtors for the purpose of increasing the amount of interest, — Held that the decree-holder was not entitled to interest after the time when he might and ought to have put up the property of the principal debtors for sale, when possibly it might have realized

342. ———— Stay of execution on giving security—Default of judgment-debtor—Liability of surety in execution—Decree how to be satisfied when property brought into Court by judgment-debtor and payment made by surety.—The execution of a decree for partition was stayed pending appeal on the defendant giving security that he would satisfy such decree as might ultimately be passed against him by the Appellate Court. That Court confirmed the decree of the lower Court. In obedience to the decree, the judgment-debtor deposited in Court certain property in his possession consisting of bonds, decrees, and other articles. But as he did not produce the whole of the property as ordered by the decree, the Court directed execution to proceed against his surety. The surety paid into Court the full sum stipulated in the surety-bond. Thereupon the judgment-debtor applied that the property deposited by him in Court should be valued and made over to the decree-holder in part satisfaction of the decree pro tanto, and that only the balance then remaining due should be paid out of the money paid in by the surety. The Court refused, holding that the decree-holder was entitled to be paid over the whole sum paid in by the surety. On appeal, held (reversing the order of the lower Court) that the property already produced in Court by the judgment-debtor should be first applied towards the satisfaction of the partition-decree, and if the decree-holder did not obtain complete satisfaction in this way, the money paid in by the surety should then be made available. GOPAL NANA SHET v. stated in column (j) of such application to be by giving the decree-holder possession of his wall by pulling down the wall erected thereon. The Court directed an order to issue to the nazir to remove the judgment-debtor's wall from the top of the decree-holder's wall. Held that the decree-holder's application could not be granted in that form, and that he should have asked the assistance of the Court to be given in the way provided for by s. 260 of Act X of 1877, by the imprisonment of the judgment-debtor, or the attachment of his property, or both. Held also that the Court was wrong in passing the order it had, but that it should have pointed out to the decree-holder the manner in which he should have asked the assistance of the Court to be given and the remedy to which he was entitled; and that, upon such amended application being made, the proper course to pursue was to serve a notice on the judgment-debtor, directing him to comply with the order contained in the decree within a time to be fixed by such notice; and that, if he fail to comply with such order within the time so limited, the Court might then, at the instance of the decree-holder, make an order either for the judgment-debtor's imprisonment or for the attachment of his property, due regard being had to the provisions of s. 260 in the latter case. Held further that the High Court in special appeal should not vary the order for execution which had been passed in such a way as to give the decree-holder that relief for which he did not ask. PROTAP CHUNDER DOSH v. 1882), settling a scheme of management of a certain temple. The scheme provided that the defendants and their heirs were, during their good conduct, to be retained as trustees and managers of the temple, and as such to maintain a proper system of worship, and to keep regular accounts, etc., etc. Subsequently plaintiffs applied for execution of the decree specifically setting forth various clauses of the scheme which had been infringed by the defendants. The plaintiffs prayed that the defendants should be removed from their office, and that the decree be enforced by their imprisonment and the attachment of their property. The Judge dismissed the application on the ground that the defendants could not be removed from the management in execution-proceedings, the plaintiff's remedy lying in a regular suit. Held that, in order to obtain the removal of the trustees, the procedure would be to amend the scheme of management so as to include a provision for the removal of the trustees necessary, and not to file a separate suit. Held also that, in so far as the decree ordered particular acts to be performed by the defendants in the management of the temple, it might be enforced by the imprisonment of the defendants, or by the attachment of their property, or by both. DAMODARHAT v. 349. — Compromise of suit.—Decree made on razinamah after lapse of five years.—Execution of decree on razinamah.—A suit was compromised by a razinamah which required that a decree should be passed in conformity with its terms. The Munsif, instead of passing a regular decree, endorsed an informal order on the razinamah, and five years afterwards, upon an application for execution, the Munsif made a formal decree and ordered its execution. The Civil Judge considered this procedure erroneous, and ordered that the decree should not be acted on. Held that it was competent to the Munsif to make a decree in pursuance of the razinamah upon the application of the party interested, even after an interval of five years; and that, the decree having been properly made, the Judge had no authority to direct that it should not be acted on. VENKATARAMANA HODAI v. 352. — Agreement not to execute unless on a contingency.—Agreement to give good title.—Certain property was handed over by a judgment-debtor to the decree-holder for the purpose of satisfying the decree, and an arrangement was made between them, under which it was stipulated, that if, within a given interval, there should hereafter be found to be a defect in the title of the judgment-debtor, and the decree-holder should be dispossessed, then whatever the unrealized portion of the amount of the decree, the decree-holder should be at liberty to realize it by execution of the decree. Held that the reasonable construction to be put upon this agreement was that, if there appeared to be a defect of title to any portion of the property handed over, and the decree-holder should be dispossessed of it by reason of such defect, then the transaction was to be put an end to, and he was to revert to his original right. As a part of the agreement, the judgment-debtor was held to have waived the benefit of the law of limitation if the event should happen upon which the decree-holder was entitled to fall back upon and execute his decree. ROY LUCHMEET SINGH v. A second execution was afterwards issued under the same decree in ignorance of the first. Held that, although the mooktear may not have had authority to receive the proceeds of the first execution, the receipt of such proceeds by the Court officer absolved the execution-debtor from all further liability; and that the

the family property, and a decree was passed in terms thereof. The younger, however, kept the elder out of possession of the lands, who, therefore, performed the worship at his own charges, and then took out execution for possession and mesne profits, in order to recoup his own expenditure on the family idols. The elder brother having died without executing his decree, his widow applied to execute it for the amount of the mesne profits due under it. Held that the widow was entitled to execute the decree for mesne profits of the idol lands, without showing that the ceremonies had been performed by her husband out of his own private funds. RADHAJIBUN MUSTAFI v. 367. — Refund decreed

Application for further execution.—A decree-holder attached certain money deposited to the credit of a suit in another Court, to which suit the judgment-debtor was a party, in the belief that the said money belonged to the judgment-debtor. The money having been remitted from the Court in which it was deposited to the Court executing the decree, a claim was made in that Court by the party entitled to the money. The claim was rejected, and the money was paid out to the decree-holder, and satisfaction of the decree was entered in the register. A suit was then brought against the decree-holder, and it was decreed that he should refund the sum obtained by him on the ground that it did not belong to his judgment-debtor. Having refunded the money, the decree-holder applied for execution of his decree. Held that the fact of satisfaction being entered in the register was no bar to the application being granted. LAKSHMANA CHETTI v. satisfaction under arrangements made by Court—Limitation—Subsequent application for execution.—In execution of a decree, an order was made by the Court directing the payment of the rents of certain property which had been attached as they became due from the mokuridar to the judgment-debtors, to be made to the decree-holder to satisfy his decree; and afterwards the execution-case was struck off the file. Subsequently, default having been made by the mokuridar in the payment of the rents of certain years, and the decree not having been fully satisfied, the decree-holder applied for an order directing the payment of the rents which were in arrear to be made by the mokuridar in accordance with the previous order. Notice having been directed to be served on the judgment-debtors, they came in and pleaded limitation. Held that, as the application was not strictly one for fresh execution, limitation could not apply; and that, as the effect of the order in the execution-proceedings was virtually to appoint the decree-holder receiver under the provisions of s. 243 of Act

369. — Partial satisfaction

Compromise—Further application for execution—Surety.—A, having obtained a decree against B and C (the former being made primarily liable), took out execution, and, on obtaining partial payment of the amount due to him by the sale of certain property belonging to B, entered up satisfaction as to that amount. Subsequently, D, another judgment-creditor of B's (who had a lien on the properties sold in execution of A's decree), brought a suit against B and A, seeking for a refund of the moneys received by the latter; this suit (to which C was not made a party) was compromised by A, who agreed to make a partial refund. Held, on A's applying for execution a second time against the representatives of C, that the partial satisfaction of the decree entered up was binding upon A, so as to prevent a second application for execution for the same amount being made; and that, even were it not so, the refund made on a private understanding between them by A to D in the suit brought by D against B and A could not be binding upon B, unless he were a party to the compromise, and much less would it be so as against the representatives of C, who was not a party to that suit, and therefore the application could not be entertained. WAHIDOUNNISSA v. 370. — Acquiescence.

Certain property was attached in execution of a decree against the judgment-debtor in the year 1847. This attachment was set aside on the application of persons claiming the property as their own. These persons were sued with the judgment-debtor by the judgment-creditor, and another decree was passed in 1855, declaring the said property liable to sale in execution of the decree of 1847. The decree of 1847 had been satisfied in part in execution-proceedings taken under the decree of 1855 against the heirs of the judgment-debtor. Held that the balance of the decree of 1847 could not be recovered in execution under the decree of 1855 against the heirs of the judgment-debtor, and that no acquiescence in the past on the part of the judgment-debtor under the decree of 1847 could render such execution valid. BINDA PRASAD v. 373. ——— Execution by representative—Illegitimacy, Question of—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, ss. 102, 103, and 208—Act XXIII of 1861, s. 11.—The questions which, under s. 11, Act XXIII of 1861, may be determined by a Court executing a decree, must be between parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, and must relate to the execution of the decree. A person who was not on the record when the decree was made does not constitute himself a party to the suit by applying for execution, and a question as to his legitimacy is consequently not one which the Court executing the decree is competent to entertain. Ss. 102 and 103 of Act VIII of 1859 relate only to proceedings prior to decree, and not to proceedings in execution. S. 208 of the same Act does not apply where the person seeking to execute is not a transferee from the original decree-holder, either by assignment or operation of law. The section does not apply to cases where the right to an equitable interest in a decree is seriously contested, and was not intended to enable a Court to try, on an application for execution, such an important question as the legitimacy of an heir. Since proceedings under s. 208, Act VIII of 1859, were, by s. 364 of the Act, not liable to appeal, a suit would probably lie to reverse an order passed therein. *ABIDUNNISSA KHATOON v. 376. ——— Civil Procedure Code, ss. 207-208—Representative of decree-holder.—Where application is made for execution of a decree standing in the name of a deceased person, the Judge ought, under s. 208 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in exercise of his judicial discretion, to put one of the applicants at least on the record, and to take such steps as to him may seem right and proper for protecting the interests of other claimants. If the deceased died while the suit was pending in appeal, the first amendment in the record must be to put in place of the deceased the names of those persons who were allowed by the Court to carry on the appeal in his name. *ABDOOLAH v. 378. ——— Right of representative of decree-holder to execution—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 210.—The representative of a deceased person in whose favour a decree has been made cannot claim execution as a matter of strict right, but must satisfy the Court, under s. 210, Civil Procedure Code, that it is proper that he should be allowed satisfaction of the decree; and the Court cannot determine the question without hearing the opposite side. *UMRITH NAUTH CHOWDHRY v. 392. — Decree against deceased person, Effect on representatives—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, ss. 104, 203, 210, 249.—When a decree has been obtained against A in his lifetime, and A dies before execution, A's estate is properly described in the proceedings in execution as the estate of A (s. 210, Code of Civil Procedure); and in the certificate of sale the purchaser is properly declared to have purchased the right, title, and interest of A in the property sold; but this procedure is improper in cases in which the debtor dies before or pending the suit, and the suit is brought or continued against his representative. In such cases the representative, and not the deceased person, is the defendant (ss. 104 and 203); and in the notification of sale (s. 249) and in the certificate of sale (s. 250) it ought to be set forth that what is sold is the right, title, and interest of the representative on the record. NATHI HARI v. provision for it in the sections relating to execution. Ss. 361 to 372 relate to changes during suit, and speak only of plaintiffs and defendants—terms which seem to show that they were only intended to apply to proceedings up to final determination by the appellate decree and not to proceedings in execution between the judgment-creditor and judgment-debtor. A Court of appeal having confirmed the decree of a second class Subordinate Judge, the decree was transferred for execution to the first class Subordinate Judge. After the transfer, the judgment-debtor died. The judgment-creditor then applied to the first class Subordinate Judge to substitute on the record the name of the representative of the deceased. The first class Subordinate Judge rejected the application and referred the judgment-creditor to the second class Subordinate Judge, who also rejected the application on the ground that the decree which was being executed was the appellate decree in which his decree was merged, and therefore he had no jurisdiction to entertain the application. Held that the course open to the judgment-creditor was by way of application to execute the decree against the legal representative of the deceased as provided by s. 234 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), in which case the application to execute the decree, having regard to s. 583, would be to the second class Subordinate Judge, although by s. 248 the notice to the party against whom execution was applied for would be issued by the first class Subordinate Judge to whom the decree was transferred for execution. HIRACHAND HARJIVANDAS v. 397. — Execution against representative of debtor—Civil Procedure Code (1882), ss. 234, 248, 249, and 578—Application by decree-holder for execution of decree by substitution on death of the judgment-debtor to the Court where the decree has been transferred.—A decree was transferred to another Court for execution. Pending the proceedings, one of the judgment-debtors died. On an application to that Court by the judgment-creditor to execute the decree against the legal representative of the deceased judgment-debtor, a notice was issued under s. 248 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The legal representative objected that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the application, and that the application should have been made under s. 234 of the Code to the Court that passed the decree. Held that the power of the Court executing a decree to order execution under s. 249 against the legal representative of a deceased judgment-debtor, after the issue of notice under s. 248, is not cut down by the provisions of s. 234, which simply empowers the decree-holder to apply to the Court which passed the decree to execute it against the legal representative of a judgment-debtor who is dead, and that the Court to which the decree has been transferred has full jurisdiction to allow execution to proceed against the legal representative. Held also that, even assuming that an application under s. 234 to the Court which passed the decree was a necessary preliminary to proceedings under s. 248 by the Court executing the decree, the omission to make it was only an irregularity which did not affect the merits of the case, and, under s. 578, the order of the Court of first instance should not have been reversed on account of such irregularity. SHAM LAL PAL v. On the death of the widow, the reversioners were brought upon the record as heirs of the widow, and the judgment-creditors applied to execute their decree against the reversioners by attaching the surplus proceeds of sale of one of the properties relinquished by the widow. Held that the widow might have sued the reversioners for recovery of the money that they had undertaken to pay for her, and that being so, there was clearly a debt due from them to the widow, the extent of which was precisely that of the judgment-debt now sought to be recovered. On the 12th June 1893, one of the defendant-respondents died. On the 8th July 1893, the High Court pronounced its judgment, and a decree was drawn up as if the deceased respondent was still living. On the 15th December 1893, the decree-holder applied for execution of the decree, but the application was rejected by the Court of first instance on the ground that, as the heirs of the deceased defendant had not been placed on the record before the judgment of the High Court was delivered, the decree was incapable of execution. Held, reversing the lower Court's decision, that the decree was on its face a good decree, and it could be executed against the heirs of the deceased defendant under ss. 234 and 248-250 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) without placing them on the record of the suit. RAMACHARYA v. Execution of the decree was sought against his legal representative, into whose hands it was found that certain of the assets of the deceased judgment-debtor had come; but before anything was recovered, the legal representative in turn died. Held that the decree-holder was entitled to execute his decree against the legal representative of the legal representative to the extent of any assets of the original judgment-debtor which might have come into her possession. JAPRI BEGAM v. 405. ————— Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 234.—Under s. 234 of the Civil Procedure Code, the legal representative of a deceased judgment-debtor is liable summarily only in respect of property actually received by him, or taken into his disposition. On the 27th March 1878, one B obtained a decree for Rs. 2,100 against one P, who died in July of that year, leaving his son H his legal representative. Subsequently, one Homjibhai sued H as the legal representative of P upon a mortgage executed by the latter in his lifetime, and obtained a decree, in execution of which he sold the mortgaged property by auction, and bought it in himself for Rs. 10. On appeal, this decree was reversed on the 3rd August 1883. Instead of thereupon recovering the property which had been sold in execution, H, on the 16th November 1883, agreed with Homjibhai that the latter should retain it on payment of Rs. 240 as costs of the suit. Shortly before this compromise was effected, B sold her decree to the appellant, K, who in 1884 applied for execution against H. The Subordinate Judge made an order for execution against H personally to the extent of Rs. 10, holding that H had fraudulently adjusted the decree in Homjibhai's suit, and that, even if there was no fraud, he, as administrator of P's estate, ought to have recovered back the money realized by the sale, instead of accepting a compromise. On appeal, the order of the Subordinate Judge was reversed by the District Judge. On appeal to the High Court,—Held, confirming the order of the District Judge, that H was not personally liable. Under s. 234 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), a representative of a deceased judgment-debtor, who has failed purposely or negligently to recover some debt due to the estate of the deceased, or some property belonging to it, is not liable in the same way as for property of the deceased which has come to his hands. In that section, property is not defined as identical with assets, and so to include mere rights of action. Nor is it provided that in an execution-proceeding the representative shall be made answerable as well for what with diligence on his part would have come to his hands as what actually has come to his hands. It may well be that, while the Legislature intended to bring the representative under the control of a summary inquiry where he had actually received property, it did not intend to make him answerable in other cases except through the medium of a suit for administration or other regular action. KHUSHRODHAI NASARVANJI v. In attempting to execute this decree against the estate of S, plaintiff was obstructed by the defendant, who was the adopted son of S. 409. ————— Maintenance—Arrears of maintenance due to a Hindu widow at her death—Liability of such arrears to satisfy a decree against her assets.—Where sums due for a widow's maintenance have become a debt, such a debt should be regarded as assets of the widow after her death liable to be taken in execution of a decree against her. A sued upon a bond executed in his favour by R, a Hindu widow, and after her death obtained a decree against N, as her legal representative, directing "that the judgment-creditor should be satisfied out of such assets of the deceased widow as may in course of execution be proved to have come into the possession of the defendant N." A sought in execution to obtain satisfaction out of arrears of an annuity due by N to the deceased on account of her maintenance for fifteen years before her death. The Subordinate Judge held that the right to recover these arrears was one personal to the widow R, and, though it could be enforced by her, would not pass to her creditor. He therefore dismissed the application. Held, reversing the order of the Subordinate Judge, that the arrears of the annuity due by N to R as maintenance were properly to be regarded as the assets of the widow, and as such were available in execution to satisfy the decree. N, owing money in his individual capacity to R, would, in the interest of creditors and justice, be assumed to have paid it to himself as her legal representative. N should therefore be held accountable for sums due by him to R, subject to such objections as he might be able to ground on limitation or other legal excuse. RAJRAV CHANDRABAO v. against a Hindu, since deceased, ancestral property in the possession of his son was attached. A petition by the son objecting that the property was not liable to be attached in his hands was dismissed. Held that the order dismissing the petition was wrong, for when a judgment-creditor seeks to attach ancestral property after it has vested in the son by survivorship under Hindu law upon the father's death, he cannot be considered as executing the decree against the property of the deceased judgment-debtor within the meaning of s. 234 of the Code of Civil Procedure. VENKATARAMA v. This property was attached in execution, but before a warrant for sale of the property was obtained, the plaintiff died. The attaching creditor issued a notice, under s. 248 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1852), addressed to the brother and widows of the plaintiff as his "legal representatives" within the meaning of that section, calling on them to show cause why execution should not proceed against them. Held that his widows, and not his brother, were the plaintiff's legal representatives for this purpose, for it must be as quasi separate property of the deceased plaintiff that the attaching creditor had a claim to it. If it were to be treated as joint property, he could have none, for the deceased's interest would then have disappeared, having gone by survivorship to his brother. NANABHAI GANPATRAO v. The question of the amount of mesne profits due, they having been decreed together with the possession of land in 1856, against a body of village proprietors was not decided till 1877. In that year an operative decree was made against the village proprietors whose names appeared as defendants in the suit of 1856, and in 1881 execution-proceedings were taken against the present plaintiff's attributing to them the character of heirs of the original judgment-debtors. Held that the right to execute for mesne profits was not wholly dependent upon whether or not the ancestor of the present

Immediately after the assignment, the applicant applied to the Court for execution, which was ordered under s. 232 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) neither A nor B having appeared to object to it, though notice of the applicant's application was given to them. The applicant accordingly, on 6th February 1892, recovered Rs 10 from B in execution. Shortly afterwards B died, and the applicant applied for further execution of the decree against the opponent as her legal representative. The opponent admitted that he was her heir, but objected to the execution on two grounds, viz., (1) that the decree had already been satisfied, and (2) that the transfer of the decree was fraudulent and collusive. The lower Court rejected the application for execution, holding, as to the alleged satisfaction, that it could not be recognized, as it was made out of Court; but, as to the second objection, that, though the sale was duly effected, there was fraud and collusion in the assignment of the decree. The applicant thereupon applied to the High Court. Held that the applicant was entitled to execution. As to the first objection, the decision of the lower Court was right. As to the second objection, there was no evidence of fraud or collusion; and the Court having found that the sale was duly effected, the applicant had the same right to execute the decree as the transferor A had. If the judgment-debtor had been alive, she could not have resisted the execution, and, as her legal representative, the opponent did not stand in any better position. The Court was bound to execute its own decree.

On 6th October 1866, C instituted a suit against A to have the sale of certain monzaha, which had taken place in execution of A's decree, set aside. This suit was decided by the High Court in favour of C, and the decision was confirmed by the Privy Council on 14th June 1872. In the meanwhile, A proceeded to execute his decree as against B and D; D objected; the lower Court allowed her objections; and the High Court on appeal, on 12th December 1866, affirmed that decision. The lower Court allowed A to proceed to execute his decree as against B, and on 2nd June 1866 certain property belonging to B was sold in execution of A's decree, and purchased by A. On 8th August 1866, the Court duly confirmed the sale, and ordered the suit to be struck off the file. On 5th July 1869, A, stating that there was still a sum of money due to him under the decree of 29th November 1861, made an application, praying that the suit might be restored to the file, and that the rights of B in certain property might be put up for sale. Held that, A's decree being a joint one, he was entitled to execute it against any of the defendants he might select. *WASED ALI v. 426. ———— Joint judgment-debtors. Liability of.—In executing a joint decree against several debtors, it is not open to a Court to stay the sale of the property of certain of the debtors, upon their offering to pay what they consider their share of the amount due under the decree; nor can a Court, in such a case, upon proper action taken by the judgment-creditor, refuse to attach and sell the property of any one of the judgment-debtors in satisfaction of the entire judgment-debt. The liabilities of joint debtors as amongst themselves, if not settled privately, can be determined only in another suit. KALLY MOHUN PAL v. DINO NATH CHUCKERHUTTY

427. ———— Joint and several decree for mesne profits.—On an appeal from an order passed in execution of a decree for possession and mesne profits, the High Court laid down the principle that, though the decree was in words a joint and several decree for mesne profits, yet where it could be proved incontestably that out of a number of defendants any one had been in possession only of particular lands or a distinct mouzali or lease, his liability to satisfy the decree would in equity extend no further than two such particular land, mouzali, or lease, and for such land the decree-holder could take out execution as against lessor and lessee; the principle was then applied to the case under appeal. Held, in explanation of that opinion, that as the appellant was the lessee of one village, he could be held jointly and severally liable with the proprietors (co-defendants), and the decree-holder could proceed against him either severally or jointly with those defendants, and realize the wasilat due on that village. When by operation of law one of several joint judgment-debtors acquires the position of decree-holder in respect of the whole judgment-debt, the effect is to extinguish the liability of the other judgment-debtors, and the decree cannot be executed against them. —Part satisfaction certified to the Court—Application for execution of full amount of decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 231, 244, 258.—On an application for execution for the full amount due under a decree by some of several joint decree-holders, the judgment-debtor objected to execution being granted for the full amount of the decree on the ground that he had already paid off a large portion of the money due under the decree to B, one of the joint decree-holders. The payment was made out of Court, but B, who claimed to be entitled to a 12½ annas share in the decree, certified the payment in the manner prescribed by s. 258 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), and represented that his claim had been satisfied in full. The other joint decree-holders denied B's right to the 12½ annas share claimed by him, and refused to recognize the payment said to have been made to him. The lower Court disallowed the objection, and granted execution for the full amount of the decree. Held that, regard being had to the provisions of the General Clauses Act (Act I of 1868), the word "decree-holder" in s. 258 of Act XIV of 1882 should be read in the plural, and looking at the provisions of s. 231 of the later Act, the Court ought not to recognize payments made out of Court, unless made and certified for the benefit of all the joint decree-holders of any portion of the decree in excess of that to which the decree-holder so paid is undisputedly entitled. Held also that a judgment-debtor is entitled to credit for any sum paid bona fide to one of several joint decree-holders, and duly certified to the Court by the latter, and that the other joint decree-holders cannot execute the decree for more than their own share. Held, further, that in this case the lower Court was wrong in wholly ignoring the payment certified by the decree-holder B, and that it should have determined, first, whether the payment to B was a fraud on the other joint decree-holders; and, secondly, what amount the latter were entitled to have out of the whole decree, the latter being the main question between the applicants for execution and the judgment-debtor, and as such clearly within the scope of s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code. *Nyna Koor v. This rule of law is sufficiently general to comprehend alike cases in which the decree is for money only and where it is for immovable property. The rule of law against breaking up the integrity of a mortgaged security is a rule aiming at the protection of the mortgagee, and is not applicable to cases where the mortgagee himself has acquired the ownership of a portion of the mortgaged property. *Bennett Das v. 462. ———— Liability of execution-creditor in damages for wrongful seizure—Attachment of stranger's property—Measure of damages.—Certain unthreshed rice belonging to the plaintiff was wrongfully attached by the defendants under a money-decree obtained by them against a third party. The attachment had been made under a warrant which specified the rice in question, and which had been issued upon a dakhast presented by the defendants in which they prayed for the attachment of this particular rice as their judgment-debtor's property. The rice, while in the custody of a bailiff of the Court nazir in the place where it had been attached, was clandestinely threshed and carried off by thieves, who left the straw. In a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover the value of the unthreshed rice from the defendants, both the lower Courts dismissed the plaintiff's claim on the ground that the theft was not the immediate or probable result of the attachment, and that the conduct of the defendants had not in any way conduced to the loss of the rice. Held by the High Court, reversing the decrees of the lower Courts, that the defendants were liable. When the wrongful seizure was made at the instance of the defendants, the plaintiff's cause of action was

This suit was dismissed, and the sons of B appealed to the High Court. A again applied for execution of his mortgage-decree, whereupon the sons of B applied for a further injunction restraining A from executing his decree pending their appeal to the High Court: this application was granted. Held that the Subordinate Judge had no right to restrain the decree-holder from executing his decree, merely on the possibility of the Appellate Court reversing his decision. *GOSSAIN MONEY PURSE v. decree, and before the granting of an application for review of judgment, to order a stay of execution of the decree. No such power exists under the Code. On the 29th July 1886, an application was made by a party against whom the High Court, on second appeal, had passed a decree, dated the 18th March 1886, for review of judgment. On the 28th August, the applicant made a further application that execution of the decree might be stayed pending the determination of the application for review, and an order was passed ex-parte granting this application. Subsequently, the opposite party applied under s. 623 of the Civil Procedure Code for a review of the ex-parte order on the grounds (i) that the Court had no jurisdiction to make it; and (ii) that the application of the 29th July was beyond time, and therefore there could be no review of judgment, and no order for stay of execution pending such review. Held that the decree of 18th March being final and unappealable, and no application for review of judgment having been granted within the meaning of s. 630 of the Code, the application for stay of execution did not fall within s. 545 or s. 546, nor did s. 547 apply to it, nor any other provision of the Code. *AMIR HASAN v. 485. ———— Stay of execution pending suit between decree-holder and judgment-debtor—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 235 (d), 581, 583.—The words "such Court" in s. 243 of the Civil Procedure Code do not limit the exercise of the powers given by that section only to decrees passed by the Court in which the suit is pending, but with reference to ss. 235 (d), 581, and 583, that Court is empowered to stay execution of decrees transferred to it for execution from either a Court of co-ordinate jurisdiction or a Court of appeal. The plaintiff instituted a suit against defendant for recovery of money and other reliefs, which was ultimately dismissed in appeal by the High Court, and he was ordered to pay defendant Rs. 1,000 as cost of the litigation. Plaintiff then brought this suit against defendant in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Farukhabad, and, while it was pending, defendant applied to the Court to execute his decree for costs. Plaintiff then applied for stay of the execution, and his application was refused by the first Court, but granted by the District Court. against whom the indorses from the payee had obtained a decree on the hundi, objected in the Court to which the decree had been transmitted for execution that execution should not be allowed, because the payee had paid the amount of the hundi to the decree-holder, after the decree had been passed, and such Court refused to entertain the objection, that the order of the lower Appellate Court, directing that the parties should be allowed to produce evidence in regard to the alleged payment, and that, should the Court of first instance find that the decree-holder had received satisfaction to the full amount of the decree, the judgment-debtors should be absolved from all liability under the decree, could not be maintained. RAM LAL v. 487. — Injunction to stay execution—Relief asked for in accordance with statements in plaint not forming a separate prayer in the plaint—General prayer for relief—Control of execution.—A, a joint owner of an estate with B, moved the joint estate from sale for arrears of Government revenue, in payment of which B had made default, for such purpose mortgaging her share in the estate to E. A then sued B for contribution. Pending that suit, B again made default, and the estate was sold and purchased by C, subject to incumbrances. Subsequently A obtained her decree against B and assigned her decree to D, who obtained an order for execution, and attached certain property belonging to B. D and E then entered into an agreement with C that they would release C and the share charged with payment of A's decree from all liability, and that they would entrust the whole conduct of the execution-proceedings to C in consideration of his granting a perpetual lease of part of the property to D and E. In pursuance of this agreement, D and E granted a release to C, and C granted a lease to E for himself, and it was contended also as benamidar of D. The agreement contained a proviso that should the Court in which the decree should be executed, of its own accord or on the petition of B or his legal representative, notwithstanding objection on the part of D and E, make any order directing the decree to be executed against the estate, then in such case D and E should not be bound by the release, and that it should be open to C to cancel the agreement. D applied for execution against the estate of the adopted son of B (who had died), but subsequently abandoned all proceedings, and transferred his decrees to the High Court to obtain execution against a house belonging to C in Calcutta. The adopted son and widow of B, in a suit brought against C and D, objected to the execution-proceedings, and after paying the sum due to D into Court, asked for an injunction staying all further proceedings in execution until the hearing of the suit. Held that D had obtained, out of the lien directed by the decree, some benefit or advantage which the plaintiffs might have a right to have valued at the hearing, and that, notwithstanding this did not form the subject of a separate prayer in the plaint, the Court would grant

On the 5th November 1886, P C died; and on the 18th December 1886 R L applied to attach certain properties belonging to the estate of his judgment-debtor, which properties were actually attached on the 8th and 12th January 1887. On the 21st December 1886, one S filed a suit to administer the estate of the deceased, and on the 20th January 1887 obtained the usual administration decree. On the 5th May 1887, S applied for an order staying all proceedings taken by R L against the estate of P C, and directing him to come in should he think fit so to do, and prove his claim in the administration suit. Held that the attachment did not create any interest in, or charge upon, the properties in favour of the attaching creditor as against other creditors, and that the order asked for ought to be granted. IN THE MATTER OF THE APPLICATION OF SOORUL CHUNDER LAW. 490. — Decree made by mistake and without jurisdiction—Decree in suit against Sovereign Prince.—A suit was brought against the Thakur of Palitana (his title being omitted from the plaint), and an ex-parte decree was obtained against him. An application on the part of the Thakur to have the decree set aside was dismissed, and the plaintiff then sued out an attachment, but, failing to execute it within a year, was compelled to apply to the Court, under s. 216 of the Code, for leave to execute it. The defendant at the same time applied to have the attachment and all proceedings under it declared null and set aside on the ground that it had been made by mistake and without jurisdiction. The Court (without expressing an opinion as to whether the order dismissing the application to have the decree set aside would have prevented it from declaring the decree void ab initio) held that, as the decree was made erroneously and without jurisdiction, it would not, when apprised of the error, assist the plaintiff in carrying it into execution in a case in which lapse of time made it incumbent on the plaintiff specially

491. ——— Modification or cancellation of security-bond—Civil Procedure Code, s. 338.—K sued R for a sum of money due on promissory notes, and obtained a decree in the Judge's Court. R appealed to the High Court, and prayed that execution might be stayed till the appeal was disposed of. The Court, under the provisions of s. 338, Code of Civil Procedure, ordered that execution might be stayed, provided good and sufficient security were given. Accordingly A appeared before the Judge, and executed a security-bond binding himself, in the event of the appeal being dismissed, to liquidate the debt. The appeal was heard by a Division Bench, and, the Judges differing, the opinion of the senior Judge prevailed under s. 36 of the Letters Patent, and the appeal was decreed. From this judgment an appeal was preferred under s. 15 to a Full Bench. After the opinion of the Division Bench was pronounced, A applied to the Judge for the return of his security-bond; but his application was refused pending the final decree of the High Court in the matter. He then moved the High Court for the cancellation or return of the bond. Held that, as the High Court had authority under s. 338, Act VIII of 1859, to make an order calling for security, it had authority at any time to modify or cancel such order, or to direct the restoration of the security when no longer required, and that in carrying out the Court's order to take security and enquire into its validity, the Judge was acting, not judicially, but ministerially. Held also that, as the decree of the Judge had been reversed by the Bench who tried the appeal, there was no decree of the Judge to execute, and the Judge's order refusing to return the security-bond was passed without jurisdiction, and was therefore null and void. On the reversal of the decree, the liability of the surety ceased, and the security-bond became a dead letter. AMBER ALI v. KASSIM ALI KHAN 18 W. R., 408

492. ——— Decree directing sale of land in pursuance of a contract specifically affecting it—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 326—Stay of sale.—S. 326 of Act X of 1877 does not apply to a decree which directs the sale of land or of a share in land in pursuance of a contract specifically affecting the same. bound to hear any objections which may be made by the decree-holder to the feasibility of the proposed scheme, and any evidence that may be offered in support of those objections; and if after hearing the decree-holder's objections, and the evidence which may be offered in support of them, the Court is not fully satisfied that the proposal is feasible, or that it can, in all reasonable probability, be carried out within the specified period, the Court ought, in the exercise of its discretion, to refuse its sanction. HIREO PHOSAD ROY v. 496. ——— Reversal of decree on appeal, Effect of—Security by decree-holder on being allowed to execute decree appealed from.—Where a decree-holder, pending appeal, gives a security-bond whereby he undertakes that, if the decision of the first Court is reversed or modified by the Appellate Court, he will make good any property taken by him in execution, the effect of such an undertaking is to bind him, in the event of the Appellate Court deciding that the claim of the creditor was in whole or in part untrue, to make good to the other party anything taken in respect of the amount so found not due. The bond would not bind the decree-holder to conform to a mere direction as to the manner in which the decree was to be executed when that direction came too late, but would need to be construed equitably, and the other party, if still a debtor to the decree-holder, would not be entitled to recover anything unless it were shown that he had sustained damage. SHUBHUTTOOLLAN MISHRA v. 508. ————— Order of sale—Application for execution struck off—Application for restoration—Finality of order.—A decree for money was passed on the 19th March 1865. The first application for its execution, made after Act X of 1877 came into force, was dated the 16th December 1878. On this application an order was made by the Court executing the decree (Munsif) for the sale of certain property belonging to the judgment-debtor. The latter objected to the execution of the decree on the ground of limitation, and the decree-holders filed an answer to the objection. On the 14th July 1879, the case was struck off, because the decree-holder had not deposited certain process-fees, without the disposal of the objection. On the 1st October 1879, the decree-holders again applied for the sale of the property, and it was ordered to be sold. On the 17th February, the judgment-debtor presented a petition repeating the objection, which, on the 13th March 1880, the Munsif entertained and disallowed. This order was affirmed in appeal by the District Judge, and again by the High Court. Meanwhile, the Munsif had struck off the case from the file of execution cases pending in his Court on the ground that the records had been despatched to the Appellate Court. On the 18th September 1882, the decree-holder again applied for execution of the decree, praying that "the suit might be restored to its number, and that the judgment-debt might be caused to be realized by attachment and sale of the judgment-debtor's property specified in the former schedule." Held that the decree-holder was entitled to execution of the decree, and that he could get it under the application which was made on the 1st October 1879, inasmuch as the matter was made res judicata by the decree of the High Court in appeal, and it must be taken that that decree was correctly passed, and that the order for sale passed upon it was properly made, and that the sale ought to have taken place. Held also that the proper application for the decree-holder to have made in September 1882 was that the case might be restored to the Munsif, and that the present application might be so dealt with as to effect the same result, because the prayer contained therein referred to the number of the proceedings of October 1879 and to the

the plaintiff, in conjunction with the other executor, took out probate of the will, and the stipulated remuneration was paid for some time and then ceased. Such an agreement, moreover, was not unlawful by reason of s. 56 of the Administrator General's Act (II of 1874), the words "receive and retain" in that section referring to the receipt or retention by an executor or administrator of commission or agency charges from the assets of the estate, and not to remuneration paid to him by a third person. Pending this litigation, S C died, leaving six sons, J, M, H, P, C, and S M, and a will made before the birth of S M, by which he left all his property to his sons other than S M. On the death of S C, J, as one of the executors of his will, compromised B's suit, so far as it related to the estate of S C, for Rs. 80,000, and afterwards, in the same capacity, sued the representatives of S to recover that amount and the costs in the suit brought by B, and obtained a decree for Rs. 1,70,000. In the meantime H died, leaving the plaintiffs, his sons and heirs, and his brothers J and M, his executors. J renounced the executorship. M, on the 3rd June 1854, as executor of H executed a deed of assignment, by which he conveyed to J and S M, for Rs. 5,000, the interest of the plaintiffs in the decree obtained by J, and subsequently, at a sale of property belonging to the representatives of S in execution of the decree, J himself became the purchaser. In 1857, in an administration suit which had been brought by the plaintiffs to compel M to account for the assets received by him from the estate of H, the master was directed to take an account, which was accordingly done. In a suit brought by the plaintiffs, the sons of H, against J M and S M to set aside the deed of 23rd June 1854,—Held that, notwithstanding the renunciation of executorship by J, he stood in a fiduciary relation to the plaintiffs, and the assignment, being found to have been made for an inadequate consideration, was ordered to be set aside on the plaintiffs paying the purchaser J the amount of the purchase-money. had funds to pay the plaintiff the debt without raising a loan, that fact would not invalidate the plaintiff's claim against the estate unless there was good reason to infer that he knew of these funds or might have known of them if he had used ordinary diligence in making enquiries on the point. KALEN NARAIN ROY CHOWDHURY v. 15. — Executors, Power of, to mortgage under Act V of 1881—Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), s. 90—Probate and Administration Act (VI of 1889), s. 19, Effect of, on a mortgage executed by executors between 1881 and 1889—Act VI of 1889, retrospective effect of—Construction of will.—One A died in 1887, after having executed a will and leaving two minor and three major sons. The major sons, who were the executors, mortgaged a portion of the estate in favour of the plaintiff for the purpose of purchasing other properties, but they did not obtain the sanction of the District Judge required under s. 90 of Act V of 1881. The two material clauses of the will were as follows:—(2) "I have certain personal debt, and I have some debt also which is joint with my brothers. In order to pay off the said debt, the executors shall sell, mortgage, or pledge moveable or immovable properties of my estate or shall let out in patni or mourasi-mokmrari the immovable properties of my estate, and they shall pay off the said debt from the proceeds. (3) If the executors desire to sell the immovable properties which I own and hold in order to purchase more profitable properties than those, they shall be competent to do that even." This suit was brought on that mortgage. Held that, although under Act V of 1881, which was in force at the time the mortgage was executed, an executor had no power to sell immovable property without the sanction of the Court, s. 19 of the Probate and Administration Act (VI of 1889) had made valid all invalid alienations that had been effected since 1881. That upon a construction of cls. 2 and 3 of the will, those clauses do not imply a limitation on the powers of the executors, and there is nothing in those clauses that interfere with the power of the executors under the law. RAJANI NATH MUKHOPADHYAYA v. RAMANATH MUKHERJI. . . 3 C. W. N., 483

16. — Power of executors to mortgage testator's properties—How far restricted by necessary implication.—Where a will contained the following provision, viz.—"The executor shall pay all my debts which are due to money-lenders, and to Bahu Radheka Charan Sen as shown by his khattas; if there be any difficulty in paying off the debts from the money due to me, the executor shall either sell the whole or a portion of my estate, or make any other settlement of the estate such as patni or dar-patni, etc., and shall pay off my debts from the consideration-money thus acquired." Held that upon such authority the executor had no power to mortgage any portion of the testator's estate. KANTI CHANDRA CHATTOPADHYA v. 17. — Manager under Hindu will—Power of mortgage and borrowing money.—R R D died possessed of certain property in Calcutta, and left him surviving S D, widow of his son J C, deceased, and three granddaughters, upon whose marriages he directed H P, his executor, to expend Rs. 1,000, and to pay his debts, etc., and further directed that, if there should not be money forthcoming for the purpose specified in the will, the property should be sold to make up the deficit. H P expended on the marriages much more than was limited by the will, and for this purpose mortgaged the property to T C and others, who were proceeding to foreclose when S D sued to have the mortgage-deed set aside as against the heir of R R D, which she claimed to be, through U S, deceased, whom she had adopted under a direction in the will of her husband that she should adopt three sons in succession, a direction which H P was enjoined by R R D's will to see carried out. The mortgagee resisted her claim on the grounds that she had not adopted a second son, that the powers of sale to H P included a power of mortgage, and that the property was necessarily mortgaged for family purposes. Judgment was given for the plaintiff. Held that R R D had no power to mortgage the property; that an attorney or executor under a Hindu will has not the same power over a testator's estate as an executor would have over leasehold estate according to English law; that according to Hindu law, a manager or an executor under a will has only a limited and qualified power over the immovable estate of the testator; that the general power of a manager under a will may be restricted by the will; that a manager under a will is bound to act according to the directions in the will; and that where an attorney or manager under a will has power to mortgage for specific purposes, it is the duty of the mortgagee to enquire into the circumstances under which, and the authority upon which, the mortgage was effected. That when a will directs a certain sum to be expended for marriage purposes, the manager or executor had no power to expend a larger sum thereon; that a mortgagee having notice of such a bequest is not justified in lending a larger sum for that purpose; that a direction in a will to sell houses and invest the surplus proceeds in Government securities does not authorize the executor to borrow money to a high interest, and amounts to a direction not to mortgage the houses; that when a plaintiff seeks to set aside a mortgage, on the ground that the mortgagor had no power to mortgage, and that the mortgagees had acted fraudulently, the Court can grant relief even if the fraud be not made out, the issue as to the mortgagor's power to mortgage being found in favour of the plaintiff. SHREEMUTTY DOSSER v. of his debts, having as such executors borrowed certain moneys from a bank wherewith to discharge debts incurred by them in the administration of the estate of the testator, gave as such executors to such bank a bond for the payment of such moneys on a certain date. By a second instrument, bearing the same date as the bond, they mortgaged as such executors aforesaid to the manager of such bank all their right, title, and interest in certain real estate of the testator as security for the payment of the moneys, authorizing and empowering, in default of payment of the same, the manager, his successors or assigns, absolutely to sell such real estate, either by private sale or public auction, for the realization of the moneys, and to sign a conveyance or conveyances, and a receipt or receipts for the purchase-money, and declaring that such conveyance or conveyances, receipt or receipts, should be as valid as if the same were signed by them. By a third instrument bearing the same date as the other two, they as such executors aforesaid constituted the manager of the bank for the time being their true and lawful attorney for them, and in their names and as their act and deed to sell such real estate and to do all acts necessary for effecting the premises. Default having been made in payment of the moneys by an instrument in writing which recited the instruments already mentioned, the manager of the bank for the time being, described as such, in the exercise of the power of sale and for the purpose of reimbursing to the bank the moneys, granted and conveyed to B such real estate and all the estate and interest therein of the executors freed from the mortgage above recited, and the manager for the executors executed the usual covenants for title and further assurance. B, having been resisted in obtaining possession of such real estate under such conveyance by a legatee of the testator, sued the legatee and the executors for a declaration of right to, and for possession of, such real estate in virtue of such conveyance. The legatee contended that the executors had no authority to confer a power of sale. Held (STUART, C.J., dissenting) that the executors had such authority under s. 209 of the Succession Act, and that the conveyance was accordingly valid and operated to transfer the property to B. SEALE v. 19. ————— Power of, to charge estate of testator.—H K died on the 5th July 1871, leaving two widows, J and A, and one son (the defendant) him surviving. By his will he appointed D his executor, and named the defendant his residuary legatee. At the time of his death, H K was indebted to M in a large amount, for which M held mortgages on his property. On the 5th March 1873, M's debt amounted to Rs. 1,33,631, and it was agreed between M and D as executor that the mortgaged property (estimated at one lakh in value) should be made over to M absolutely in part payment, and that D should become personally liable to her for the balance of Rs. 33,631 with interest at 9 per cent. payable within twelve months. In consideration thereof, M was to release D as executor and the defendant from liability for the sum of Rs. 1,33,631. An indenture carrying out this agreement was executed on the same day, and D gave a bond making himself personally liable to M for Rs. 33,631. Shortly afterwards a new arrangement was made. M agreed to a bond of Rs. 10,631 of the Rs. 33,631 due under the bond and to accept Rs. 23,000 payable in yearly instalments of Rs. 3,000 in satisfaction of her whole claim. In pursuance of this agreement, D, as executor, paid the first instalment, J paid the second instalment, D having made over the estate of H K to the Administrator General under the provisions of Act II of 1874. M died in October 1874, and the plaintiff as her executrix sued the defendant for the instalments due in 1876, 1877, and 1878. Held that, the estate of H K having been released by M by the deed executed on the 5th March 1873, it was not competent for D as executor by a new contract to charge it with any liability in respect of the amount due to M. *Childs v. Where a testator directed his executor to manage the whole of his estate through the Court of Wards,—Held that there was no restriction on the executor's power of sale, and that the provisions of s. 90 of the Probate and Administration Act did not apply to his case. Held also that an order on an application under s. 90 of the Probate and Administration Act, at the instance of a beneficiary, where there was no restriction on the power of the executor to sell, was without jurisdiction, and appealable under s. 15 of the Letters Patent. *Hurrieh Chunder Choudhry v. 27. — Executor de son tort, Liability of, in Hindu law—Assets of deceased's estate—Onus probandi—Award of interest as damages.—In a suit upon a registered bond, payable in eleven yearly instalments, to recover instalments 5-10 from the representatives of two deceased co-debtors, who, as managing members of an undivided Hindu family, had contracted the debt for family purposes, the plaintiff impleaded G, the son-in-law of one of the deceased co-debtors, and his brothers, on the ground that they, in collusion with the widow of such deceased co-debtor, had, as volunteers, intermeddled with, and possessed themselves of, substantially the whole property of the family of the deceased co-debtor. Held that G and his brothers were properly joined as co-defendants, and were liable for the debt of the deceased to the extent of the assets received by them. Held also that, as the plaintiff had shown that some property of the deceased co-debtors had passed to G and his brothers, the burden of proof lay on G and his brothers to show that they had not received so much of the deceased debtor's property as would satisfy the debt. Held also that interest, in the nature of damages, from the date of suit was properly awarded. MAGALURI GURUDIAN v. E, the executrix appointed by the will of one J, applied to the High Court for probate of the will, and N, the widow of J, entered a caveat. By a consent-decree, dated 25th February 1892, it was ordered that probate should issue to E, and by the same decree it was declared that E, as executrix, was not entitled to a sum of Rs 4,178-10-0 or any other sum or sums of money to be received from the B. & C. I. Railway Co. In that same year, N obtained payment from the Railway Co. of the said sum of Rs 4,178-10-0 and of another sum of Rs 166 due to the deceased. On the 3rd February 1893, probate was issued to E. In 1894, the plaintiff sued

N and R for Rs 165 due to him by the deceased J. He claimed against N as executrix de son tort. Held that, probate not having actually issued to R at the time that N received the money from the Railway Co., although an order for probate had been made, she had, by receiving it, constituted herself executrix de son tort, and was therefore liable to the plaintiff, and could be joined as co-defendant with R in the suit. Held also that the fact that by the terms of the consent-decree of the 25th February 1892 she was allowed to receive the money and retain it was no defence. The consent-decree did not bind the creditors or free her from her responsibility to them to the extent of the assets which she received. NAVABHAI v. PESTONJI RATANJI

20. ———— Executor who has administered the estate without probate required to lodge will in Court and obtain probate.—On T V died in 1883, and by his will appointed his brother T sole residuary legatee and also his executor, and he directed that, in case of T's death, D (T's son) should be executor. T accordingly acted as executor until his death in May 1886, and then his son D continued to administer the estate, but neither of them obtained probate of the will. T left a will whereby he appointed his two sons, D and the applicant, his executors and also his residuary legatees. In June 1895, the applicant, stating that he was one of the residuary legatees of T, applied for a citation to be issued to D directing him to bring in and prove the will of T V. In reply, D submitted that there was no necessity to prove the will; that the estate was fully administered, and that he had no funds left in his hands out of which to pay the costs of probate. Held that the executor, D, must lodge the will in Court, and that, on the applicant paying half the estimated cost of obtaining probate (including probate duty), D should take out probate of the will. *DAYABHAI TAPIDAS v. In appeal the Sessions Judge held that P was not an accomplice, and, having considered his evidence accordingly, dismissed the appeal. Held that it was sufficiently shown that the money was not voluntarily given, that it was given by J to obtain his release from police custody, in which he was detained on no reasonable or sufficient ground, and it was extorted, because the sub-inspector refused to release J, as he was bound to do, unless he were paid that money. That P, paying such money under such circumstances, could not be regarded as an accomplice of the sub-inspector in such misconduct. ANHOY KUMAR CHUCKERBUTTY v. JAGAT CHUNDER CHUCKERBUTTY [I. L. Municipal Act (Bengal Act III of 1884), ss. 320, 321—Liability for neglecting to keep a factory in a clean state.—The Inspector of Factories, having found the latrines of the Hastings Mill within the Serampore Municipality in a filthy state, instituted a prosecution against the manager of the mill, but the prosecution failed. He then prosecuted as representing the Municipal Commissioners of Serampore the Chairman of the Municipality, who, on conviction, was fined Rs. 200 for "neglecting to keep the factory free from effluvia arising from a privy" under the provisions of the Factories Act and of the Bengal Municipal Act, s. 320. Held that the conviction of the Chairman was unsustainable on the finding that the Municipality and the occupier of the factory were jointly responsible. Held, further, that it lay upon the occupier of the factory, as being primarily liable for breach of any of the provisions of the Factories Act, to give the strictest proof of circumstances exonerating himself from the liability in order to fix it on any other person. CHAIRMAN OF THE SERAMPORE MUNICIPALITY v. 1. ——— Penal Code, s. 211—Knowledge by accused of offence.—To establish a charge under s. 211 of the Penal Code, it is necessary to show that the accused knew or had reason to believe that an offence had been committed. QUEEN v. BRITTO KAHAR. 1 Ind. Jur., O. S., 128

2. ——— Knowledge that charge is false.—A person may in good faith institute a charge which is subsequently found to be false, or he may, with intent to cause injury to an enemy, institute criminal proceedings against him, believing there are good grounds for them, but in neither case has he committed an offence under s. 211 of the Penal Code. To constitute this offence, it must be shown that the person instituting criminal proceedings knew there was no just or lawful ground for such proceedings. The averment that the accused knew that there was no lawful ground for the charge instituted is a most material one. QUEEN v. CHIDNA [3 N. W., 327]

3. ——— False charge by police officer.—S. 211 of the Penal Code applies not only to a private individual, but also to a police officer who brings a false charge of an offence with intent to injure. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF NABODEEP CHUNDER SIKAR. 11 W. R., Cr., 2

4. ——— False charge in petition of complaint.—If the charge of voluntarily causing hurt, contained in a petition of complaint, is wilfully false, and made with intent to injure, then the complainant is legally chargeable with the offence described in s. 211 of the Penal Code. QUEEN v. MATA DYAL. 4 N. W., 6

5. ——— False charge—False information—Penal Code, s. 162.—Where a person specifically complains that another man has committed an offence, and does so falsely with the object of causing injury to that person, he is guilty of making a false charge of an offence under s. 211 of the Penal Code, and not under s. 162. EMPRESS v. ARJUN. I. L. R., 7 Bom., 184

6. ——— Compounding of offence—Discharge of accused charged under s. 211 upon plea of original charge having been compounded.—The fact that an offence alleged to have been committed has been compounded is no conclusive answer to a charge made against the prosecutor under s. 211 of the Penal Code. A laid a charge against M for wrongful confinement. The police reported the case as a false one, and A not appearing to prove his complaint, the District Magistrate ordered him to be prosecuted under s. 211 of the Penal Code, and made over the case to a Deputy Magistrate. Upon the hearing of such charge, A pleaded that he had compounded the original charge laid by him against M, and that therefore the charge against him under s. 211 could not lie. The Deputy Magistrate, without hearing any evidence, dismissed the case. Held that the course so taken was illegal, as such plea was no conclusive answer to a charge under s. 211. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. The original complaint must be first disposed of, according to law, before such proceedings can be taken. GUNAMONY SAKUI v. QUEEN-EMPRESS

12. ———— Charge laid before police officer.—There is nothing in s. 211 of the Penal Code which limits the penalty there imposed to cases in which attempts have been made to substantiate false charges in a Court of Justice. A false charge made before the police is therefore punishable under this section. ASHEROY ALI v. EMPRESS
[I. L. R., 5 Cal., 281]

13. ———— Complaint to police.—To prefer a complaint to the police in respect of an offence which they are competent to deal with, and thereby to set the police in motion, is to institute a criminal proceeding within the meaning of s. 211 of the Penal Code. QUEEN v. BONOMALLY SOHAI

[19 W. R., Cr., 5]

16. ———— Statement made to police as to suspicion of offence—Institution of criminal proceedings. A statement made to the police of a suspicion that a particular person had committed an offence is not a "charge" within the meaning of s. 211 of the Penal Code, nor does it amount to the institution of a criminal proceeding, and the person making the statement cannot, on the suspicion being proved to be unfounded, be convicted under that section. IN THE MATTER OF BRAMANUND BRUTTACHARIJEE . 8 C. 17. ———— Charge on insufficient evidence.—It is not sufficient ground for a charge under s. 211 of the Penal Code that a person to whom a wrong has been done, or who conceives that a wrong has been done to him, makes a charge or complaint upon evidence or a statement which is not or ought not to be sufficient to satisfy a reasonable mind, if in truth he did not know at the time he made the complaint that there was no just and lawful ground for making it. *QUEEN v. 18. ———— False charge of burning house.—Where a man burns his own house and charges another with the offence of doing so, he should be convicted and sentenced under s. 211 (and not under s. 195) of the Penal Code. QUEEN v. BHUGWAN AHIR . 8 W. R., Cr., 65

19. ———— Charge of refusal to give stamped receipt.—The refusal to give a stamped receipt for money paid not being in itself an offence at law, to make a false charge against a party of refusing to give such a stamped receipt is not an indictable offence. REG. v. GAFAT KUM KUBASI . 1 Bom., 92

20. ———— Instituting criminal proceedings.—Under s. 211, Penal Code, "instituting a criminal proceeding" may be treated as an offence in itself apart from "falsely charging" a person with having committed an offence. Where a person is charged with instituting a criminal proceeding, with intent to cause injury, knowing that there was no just or lawful ground for such proceeding, it is for the prosecution to make out a distinct case against him, not for the prisoner in the first instance to show that he had just or lawful ground. QUEEN v. NOBOKISTO GHOSH . 6 W. R., Cr., 87

Code, and if a person only makes a false charge, his case falls under the first part of the section, irrespective of the fact that the false charge relates to "an offence punishable with death, transportation for life, or imprisonment for seven years or upwards." Queen-Empress v. Pitam Rai. I. L. R., 5 All., 215

22. — Institution of criminal proceedings.—Where no criminal proceeding is instituted on a false charge of an offence of the nature described in the latter part of s. 211 of the Penal Code, the person making such charge is punishable only under the first part of that section. Queen-Empress v. Parahu. I. L. R., 5 All., 598

23. — A false charge before the police is a false charge falling within the first portion of s. 211 of the Penal Code. The latter portion of s. 211 of the Penal Code is confined to cases in which criminal proceedings have been instituted, and does not apply to false charges merely. Empress of India v. Pitam Rai, I. 24. — False charge made to police—Institution of criminal proceedings—Penal Code, s. 211.—A person who sets the criminal law in motion by making a false charge to the police of a cognizable offence institutes criminal proceedings within the meaning of s. 211 of the Penal Code; and if the offence falls within the description in the latter part of the section, he is liable to the punishment there provided. *Karim Buksh v. 25. — False charge of offence punishable with death—Criminal proceedings, Necessity for institution of.—To constitute the offence defined in the second paragraph of s. 211 of Act XLV of 1860, it is necessary that criminal proceedings should be instituted. Where the offence committed does not go further than the making of a false charge to the police, the making of such charge does not amount to the institution of criminal proceedings, and the offence committed will fall within the first paragraph of s. 211, notwithstanding that the offence so falsely charged may be one of those referred to in the second paragraph of that section. Queen-Empress v. Pitam Rai, I. L. R., 5 All., 215, and Queen-Empress v. Parahu, I. L. R., 5 All., 598, followed. Karim Buksh v. Queen-Empress, I. L. R., 17 Cal., 574, disented from. *Queen-Empress v. The person who preferred the charge was now tried under Penal Code, s. 211, and was found to have acted with the intent and the knowledge therein mentioned, and he was convicted and sentenced to four years' rigorous imprisonment. Held that the prisoner had instituted criminal proceedings within the meaning of that section, and that the conviction and sentence were in accordance with law. Queen-Empress v. Nanjunda Rao. I. L. R., 20 Mad., 79

27. — False report by a police-officer—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195—Sanction.—Where a police-officer made a false report regarding a certain offence which the Magistrate found, after hearing the evidence, to be false, and thereupon sanction was given for the prosecution of the police-officer under s. 211 of the Penal Code, Held that it could not be said that the police-officer instituted or caused to be instituted any criminal proceedings against any person, and therefore the sanction for the prosecution of the police-officer under s. 211, Penal Code, was bad in law. Thakur Tewary v. Queen-Empress. 4 C. W. N., 347

28. — Penal Code, ss. 211, 499, and 500—Falsely charging a person with an offence—Defamatory statement made by a person examined in the course of an official or departmental inquiry—Witness—Privilege—Qualified privilege—Criminal Procedure Code (1882), ss. 191 and 197.—The complainant was Deputy Collector and first class Magistrate of Bijapur. Certain petitions said to emanate from the accused were received by Government charging the complainant with bribery and corruption. Government thereupon ordered Mr. Monteth, Collector and Magistrate of the district, to inquire into the matter. Mr. Monteth enforced the attendance of the accused by writing to the police, who brought the accused before him. In answer to questions put to him, the accused denied having sent any petition to Government, but stated that he had paid a bribe to the complainant to secure the acquittal of his son, who was then on his trial on a charge of theft before him. Mr. Monteth examined other witnesses, and reported the result of his inquiry to Government. Government permitted the Deputy Collector to prosecute the accused, and he accordingly lodged a complaint against the accused for defamation under s. 500 of the Penal Code (XLV of 1860) in having stated to Mr. Monteth, in the course of the inquiry, that he (the complainant) had accepted a bribe from him. The trying Magistrate was of opinion that the offence fell under s. 211 of the Penal Code. He at first framed charges both under ss. 211 and 500. But subsequently he struck out the charge of defamation under s. 500, and convicted the accused under s. 211 of making a false charge. On appeal, the Joint Sessions Judge was of opinion that the charge under s. 211 could not be maintained, as the accused had not made any "false charge" to a Court or officer having jurisdiction to investigate it. As regards the charge of defamation, he was of opinion that the fact of bribery was not proved. But he held that in making the statement to Mr. Monteth the accused had acted in good faith, and that his case fell under excep. 8 to s. 499 of the Penal Code. He therefore reversed the conviction under s. 211, and acquitted the accused of defamation under s. 500 of the Code

Against this order of acquittal, Government appealed to the High Court. Held that the accused was guilty of defamation. Held also that s. 211 of the Penal Code had no application to the present case. The accused was brought before Mr. Monteth against his will. He did not make any complaint before that officer; and though what he stated, in answer to questions put to him, was defamatory, the imputations did not constitute a "false charge" within the meaning of s. 211, as he did not intend to set the criminal law in motion. Per BANADE, J.—The words "falsely charging" in s. 211 must be construed along with the words which speak of the "institution of proceedings." These latter words are obviously used in a technical and exclusive sense, and the same restricted sense must be given to the words which relate to a false charge as implying a false complaint. Karim Bakhsh v. Queen-Empress, 1 L. R., 17 Cal., 574, followed. Held also that, in the absence of sanction from Government, the inquiry held by Mr. Monteth, the District Magistrate, was not a taking cognizance of the offence. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KARIGOWDA. . . . I L. R., 19 Bom., 51

29. — Prosecution under s. 182—Rejection of complaint with reference to police report.—K made a report at a police-station accusing B of a certain offence. The police having reported to the Magistrate having jurisdiction in the matter that in their opinion the offence was not established, the Magistrate ordered the case to be "shelved." K then preferred a complaint to the Magistrate, again accusing B of the offence. The Magistrate rejected the complaint with reference to the police report. Subsequently B, with the sanction of the police authorities, instituted criminal proceedings against K under s. 182 of the Penal Code in respect of the report which he had made at the police station, and K was convicted under that section. Held that, before proceeding against K, the Magistrate should have fully investigated and sifted his complaint for himself, and should not have abrogated the functions imposed on him by law, because the police had reported against the entertainment of the case. The views expressed in Government v. Karindad, 1 L. R., 6 Cal., 496, concurred in. EMPEROR v. RADHA KISHAN

[I. L. R., 5 All., 36]

30. — Report of police—Absence of judicial proceeding—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 157, 159.—Where the petitioner laid information to the police charging a certain person with criminal trespass in his house to commit a particular offence and the police reported that they did not believe the object was to commit the offence stated, but that they were not disinclined to believe the charge of trespass, whereupon the Magistrate called upon the petitioner to prove his case, and the latter appeared and declined to take any further proceedings; the Magistrate then took evidence and directed the prosecution of the petitioner under s. 211, Penal Code.—Held that there was no judicial proceeding before the Magistrate, and the order under s. 470, Criminal Procedure Code, directing the prosecution of the petitioner was bad.

That s. 159, Civil Procedure Code, had no application to the present case; an inquiry can only be made under that section only on a report submitted within the terms of s. 157 and the police report, and this case was not of that description. Mouzi Duzai v. NAURANGI LALL. . . . 4 C. W. N., 351

31. — Charge made on report of police that case was false—Charge of giving false information.—A commitment for trial under the provisions of s. 211 of the Penal Code, for knowingly instituting a false charge with intent to injure the persons accused, is not illegal merely because the complaint which the accused made has not been judicially enquired into, but is based on the report of the police that the case was a false one. *EMPEROR v. 32. — Enquiry into truth of charge—Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, s. 471.—A petition was presented to the Joint Magistrate charging the police with having made a false report of an investigation which they had been directed to make at the instance of the petitioner. The Joint Magistrate, after reading the police report, rejected the petition, and directed the petitioner to be prosecuted under s. 211 of the Penal Code for having made a false charge. Held that the Joint Magistrate should not have made the order without first instituting an enquiry into the truth of the complaint such as is required by s. 471 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. *Queen v. 33. — Dismissal of complaint—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), ss. 470 and 471.—Where a charge had been preferred against a person, and the Magistrate before whom it was heard, after hearing the statement of the complainant, but not those of the witnesses, dismissed the complaint; and subsequently, on the application of the person charged, granted him leave under s. 470 to prosecute the complainant for bringing a false charge.—Held that the proceedings were not irregular, and that the Magistrate was justified in acting as he had done. Held also that there is a distinction in the proceedings to be adopted when a sanction is given under s. 470, and the institution by the Court of its own motion of proceedings under s. 471. *Nissar Hossain v. 34. — Allowing opportunity to show grounds for charge.—Where a person is charged under s. 211 of the Penal Code with having, with intent to injure, falsely charged another with an offence knowing that there is no just and lawful grounds for the same, the party accused should be allowed to show the information on which he acted, and the Judge ought not only to be satisfied that the facts alleged as the ground for making the charge are

Act X of 1872 (Criminal Procedure Code), ss. 146, 147.—Where a Magistrate dismisses a complaint as a false one under s. 147 of the Criminal Procedure Code and decides to proceed against the complainant under s. 471 for making a false charge, he is not bound before so proceeding to give the complainant an opportunity of substantiating the truth of the complaint, by being allowed to produce evidence before him. *EMPRESS v. 37. Sanction to prosecution for making false charge.

—A sanction for a prosecution for making a false charge under s. 211 of the Penal Code, without hearing all the witnesses whom the person accused of making the false charge wishes to produce, is illegal. 38. Opportunity of substantiating charge.—Upon a trial for bringing a false charge with intent to injure, it appeared that the original complaint was lodged in the Court of the Extra Assistant Commissioner, and a local inquiry by a competent police officer was directed. The officer reported that the charge was false, and recommended that the prisoner should be prosecuted. The Extra Assistant Commissioner ordered the papers to be sent to the Deputy Commissioner who ordered the prosecution, and the prisoner was convicted. Held that the conviction was bad. The Extra Assistant Commissioner should, on receipt of the report of the police, have communicated its contents to the prisoner and afforded her an opportunity of substantiating her complaint, and should then have decided the case. *IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF SOXHINA BIBI. truth of charge—Penal Code, s. 182.—J complained to the police that she had been raped by E. The police having reported the charge to be false, criminal proceedings were instituted against her under s. 182 of the Penal Code. In the meantime J made a complaint in Court again charging E with rape. This complaint was not disposed of, but the proceedings against her under s. 182 of the Penal Code were continued, and she was eventually convicted under that section. Held, setting aside the conviction and directing that J's complaint should be disposed of, that such complaint should have been disposed of under s. 211 before proceedings were taken against her under s. 182. EMPRESS v. JAMNI I. L. R., 5 All., 397

42. Preliminary

enquiry—Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, s. 471—Penal Code, s. 182.—An offence under s. 211 of the Penal Code includes an offence under s. 182; it is therefore open to a Magistrate to proceed under either section, although, in cases of a more serious nature, it may be that the proper course is to proceed under s. 211. *BHOOTSEAN v. that body, the person who made the charge complained to the Magistrate of the district who directed a fresh investigation. The charge was again reported false. The complainant thereupon filed a petition, in which he alleged that the second investigation had not been properly conducted, and asked that further evidence might be taken by a specified officer. No further investigation having taken place, the complainant was ordered to be prosecuted under s. 211 of the Penal Code, and on trial was convicted and sentenced. On appeal to the High Court, it was held that the conviction was illegal, inasmuch as an opportunity had not been afforded to the accused of producing all his evidence in support of the charge made by him. In the matter of Russick Lall Mullick, 7 C. L. R., 332, and In the matter of Biyogi Bhagat, 4 C. L. R., 134, followed. Per MACLEAN, J.—The proper principle which should guide a Magistrate is that, if no complaint is made before him after a reasonable time has elapsed from the conclusion of a police enquiry, he would be justified in proceeding against a person who has made a complaint to the police which has been found to be false; but if a complaint is made, that complaint must be dealt with judicially. It is unfair even then to proceed against the complainant without hearing any witnesses whom he may wish to examine. Per MITTAL, J.—Although a Magistrate has power under s. 147 of the Criminal Procedure Code to dismiss a complaint without examining witnesses, yet in such a case no sanction for prosecution under s. 211 of the Penal Code should be granted. 45. ————— Conviction by Sessions Court—Opportunity not given to accused to prove charge before Magistrate.—E made a complaint of theft against S to the police. The police referred the case as false to the Magistrate. The Magistrate summoned E and examined him, but gave him no opportunity to prove the charge by calling the witnesses named by him. The Magistrate then ordered the case to be struck off the file and gave sanction to prosecute E. E was subsequently brought before the same Magistrate and committed to the Sessions, and convicted by the Sessions Court under s. 211 of the Penal Code. Held that, although E had no opportunity of proving this case before he was himself tried, the conviction was not illegal. *Government v. 46. ————— Prosecution for making a false charge—Opportunity to accused to prove the truth of charge—Criminal Procedure Code, s. 195.—A complaint of offences under ss. 323 and 379 of the Penal Code was referred to the police for enquiry. The police reported that the charge was a false one, and thereupon the Magistrate of the district passed an order under s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code, directing the prosecution of the complainants for making a false charge under s. 211 of the Penal Code. Held that the order under s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code should not have been

47. ————— Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1892), s. 191—Cognizance of an offence on suspicion—Police report—False charge, Prosecution for, without first enquiring into truth of original complaint.—A person having laid an information before the police, the police reported the case as false; the informant then appeared before a Magistrate, asking that his case might be investigated and his witnesses summoned. This application was refused, and the Magistrate, after perusing the police report, passed an order directing him to be prosecuted under s. 211 of the Penal Code. Held that the application to the Magistrate was "a complaint" within the meaning of s. 191 of the Criminal Procedure Code into which the Magistrate was bound to have enquired. A Magistrate may take cognizance under s. 191 of the Criminal Procedure Code of an offence brought to his notice by a police report which affords ground for a suspicion that an offence has been committed; but as a matter of sound judicial discretion, a Magistrate should not so proceed and direct that the person suspected be tried until some person aggrieved has complained, or until he has before him a police report on the subject based on an investigation directed to the offence to be tried, and in cases of alleged false charges until it is clear that the original charge has been either heard and dismissed or abandoned. And before the order to prosecute for the false charge is made, the person who made the original charge should be offered an opportunity of supporting it or abandoning it. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SHAM LALL I. L. R., 14 Cal., 707

48. ————— False complaint to police.—The accused complained to the police that A and B had robbed him. After inquiry the police reported to the Magistrate that the charge was false. The Magistrate thereupon struck off the case without holding any further inquiry himself. The accused was subsequently charged and convicted under s. 211 of the Penal Code of making a false charge. On appeal it was contended that, as the accused had not been given an opportunity of substantiating his complaint before a Magistrate, his prosecution was illegal, or at the most he ought to have been charged under s. 182, and not s. 211. Held that, in order to constitute an offence under s. 211, it was not necessary that the complaint should be made to a Magistrate. It was enough that it was made to the police authorities and related to a cognizable offence, and that action was thereupon taken by the police. Held also that the fact that no opportunity was allowed to the accused by the Magistrate to substantiate his complaint before striking it off was not a circumstance which invalidated the commitment duly made, and the conviction otherwise good could not be set aside on account of such omission. The trial before the committing Magistrate and in the Sessions Court give ample opportunity to the accused to substantiate his

See QUEEN v. MUNGUL DASS 23 W. R., Cr., 28

2. ————— Requisites for conviction of giving false evidence.—The true rule in a case of giving false evidence is that no man can be convicted of such offence except on proof of facts which, if accepted as true, show not merely that it is incredible, but that it is impossible that the statements of the party accused made on oath can be true. QUEEN v. AHMED ALY 11 W. R., Cr., 25

3. ————— False statement under affirmation criminating witness himself.—Where a party makes a false statement when legally bound by a solemn affirmation, the fact that the statement was one tending to criminate himself will not justify his acquittal on a charge of giving false evidence. ANONYMOUS 3 Mad., Ap., 29

4. ————— False statement of witness criminating himself—Penal Code, s. 191.—Although a person under examination as a witness is bound by his affirmation to tell the truth, if he is examined on a point on which he is likely to criminate himself, his position should be explained to him by the Magistrate, as otherwise he may be induced, through ignorance of the state of the law, to deny the existence of facts for fear of penal consequences. Although without such a warning he may make a false denial and thereby become guilty of the offence of intentionally giving false evidence, his offence will not be deserving of severe punishment. JADDOO NATH DUTT v. EMPRESS 2 C. L. R., 181

5. ————— Evidence of corrupt intention—Statement known by accused to be false.—Upon a prosecution for giving false evidence, the law does not require proof of a corrupt intention. It is sufficient that there is proof of intention, and if the statement was false, and known by the accused to be false, it may be presumed that in making it the accused intentionally gave false evidence. QUEEN v. AMBER ALI KHAN 3 N. W., 133

6. ————— Contradictory statements in cross-examination.—Intention is the essential ingredient in the constitution of an offence under s. 193, Indian Penal Code. Where a person made contradictory statements in the course of cross-examination, and he was convicted under s. 193, Indian Penal Code,—Held that the Magistrate should have taken into consideration the fact that the statements were made in course of cross-examination when possibly he may have been either confused, or under some mistake regarding the question put to him. IN THE MATTER OF MUNNI BUKSH 3 C. Magistrate, although he might examine him to obtain information, could not legally examine him on oath, nor could the accused be said at that stage of the proceedings to be a witness, even though he were examined on oath. There was no authority that, being so examined, the accused was bound by any express provision of law to state the truth. 29. — Collector under Land Acquisition Act whether "a Court"—Power of such Collector to administer oath or require verification—Deputy Collector under Land Acquisition Act—Judicial officer—Revenue Court—Over-estimate of value of land—False statement—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 195, 476—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 193—Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), s. 55.—The expression "the Court" in the Land Acquisition Act does not include a Collector, nor is there any authority given to the Collector to administer an oath or to require a verification. It is a false statement made under a verification that constitutes an offence under s. 193 of the Penal Code, not a verification oath or solemn affirmation. The Deputy Collector acting under the Land Acquisition Act is not a judicial officer, he cannot properly be regarded as a Revenue Court within the terms of s. 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, his proceedings under the former act are not regulated by the Code of Civil Procedure, nor is he right in requiring a petition put in before him to be verified in accordance with that Code, so as to make any false statement punishable as perjury. The Deputy Collector is not in a position to pass any final order in the matter of value of the land or the right to claim the price fixed; a party dissatisfied can claim a reference to the Civil Court, whose duty it is to settle the matter in dispute judicially; therefore, to subject parties who claimed the right to such a reference to a criminal prosecution, when the matters on which the Deputy Collector had formed an opinion as a revenue officer under the Land Acquisition Act must be submitted to the determination of a Court, is obviously premature and improper, and is almost certain to operate very prejudicially towards them in the trial before the Civil Court of the same matter. In proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act what may be found to be an exaggeration or over-estimate of the value of land cannot properly constitute a false statement, which would demand a prosecution for perjury, and the fact that some years before the land was offered for sale at a much lower price is no sufficient ground for imputing such an offence. DURGA DAS BUKHIT v. After such committal, it was discovered that one of the jurors empanelled in the dacoity case was deaf and partly blind; and thereupon, under s. 282, Criminal Procedure Code, the case was tried de novo before a competent jury. Held that the fact that the trial for dacoity had to be commenced de novo did not exonerate the prisoner from the obligation to speak the truth imposed by s. 14 of the Indian Oaths Act X of 1873 in the first trial, which became abortive owing to the incompetency of one of the jurors, nor prevent the statement made by the witness at the first trial from being made the subject of an offence under s. 191 or 193 of the Penal Code. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. is illegal. When the accused made an solemn affirmation a statement before an Income Tax Commissioner, which statement the accused knew, or had reason to believe, to be incorrect, it was held that such statement amounted to the offence of giving false evidence in a judicial proceeding under s. 193 of the Penal Code, and was therefore not cognizable by a full-power Magistrate, as it could not be treated as constituting an offence triable under s. 181 of the Penal Code making a false statement to a public servant. REG. v. Held therefore, where a person had applied for a refund under Ch. VI of Act I of 1879, and the Collector made over the application for enquiry to a Deputy Collector, that the Deputy Collector was not entitled to put the witnesses produced by the applicant on their oaths, and consequently, in reference to the statements of such witnesses, no charge under s. 181 or s. 193 of the Penal Code was sustainable. EMPRESS v. Nor under similar circumstances will the want of verification of a petition of appeal on the part of the applicant, as provided by s. 73 of the Act, oust the jurisdiction of the Criminal Court. Reg. v. Held also that, except as directed by s. 82 of Act III of 1877, the Magistrate has no authority on his own mere motion to frame a charge against the accused in consequence of evidence given in the course of the trial by the registering officer, in respect of certain statements made before him during registration proceedings. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. ss. 193, 194—Power of Sessions Judge.—The Sessions Judge has no power to commit a man for having given false evidence before the Magistrate, but he can commit him for having given false evidence in his own Court. In the trial of a prisoner for murder, a witness stated on oath before the Sessions Court that another had committed the murder, whereas before the Magistrate he had stated, as was the fact, that the prisoner had committed the murder. Held that such witness was guilty under s. 193, and not under s. 194, of the Penal Code, as he did not know that he would cause a conviction for murder. QUEEN v. 2. FABRICATING FALSE EVIDENCE.

63. — Fabrication of false evidence—Penal Code, s. 193 and s. 190—Illegal concealment to fabricate evidence.—The term "fabrication" in s. 193 of the Penal Code refers to the fabrication of false documentary evidence to be used in a suit, so that to convict under this section it is essential to aver and to prove that the fabricated documents were intended for that purpose. The illegal concealment, by act or omission, contemplated by s. 120 of the Code, has reference to the existence of a design on the part of third persons to fabricate evidence. QUEEN v. the effect that the Rs500 in question then stood at the payee's credit as a revenue deposit, and that it was about to be transferred to the Civil Court. Upon the first of these reports, an order was signed by the treasury officer for the transfer of the money to the Civil Court concerned, and to effect such transfer, a cheque was prepared by the sale-mohurrir, which was originally drawn up related to the sum of Rs500 already mentioned. The signature of the cheque by the treasury officer was delayed for some time, and meanwhile the cheque was altered by the prisoner in such a manner as to make it relate to another deposit of Rs500 which had been made subsequently to the above, and to the credit of another person. The result of this was the transfer of the second payee's Rs500 to the Civil Court, as if it had been the first Rs500, and to the credit of the first payee's representative. The prisoner was convicted under s. 465 of the Penal Code in respect of the cheque, and under s. 218 in respect of the two reports above referred to. Held that the prisoner's intention in making the false reports was to stave off the discovery of the previous fraud and save himself or the actual perpetrator of that fraud from legal punishment, and that, having prepared the reports in a manner which he knew to be incorrect, he was rightly convicted under s. 218 of the Penal Code. Held further that, as the prisoner, who was a public servant, made these reports and assumed to make them in due course and as a part of his duty and held them out as reports which were made by the proper officer, and as no question was put in the examination of the witnesses from the office which suggested that it was not his business to make such reports, it must be inferred that he made them because it was his business to do so, and as a public servant within the meaning of s. 218 of the Penal Code. QUEEN-EMPERESS v. (f)—Cognizable offence—Offence under Gambling Act (Bengal Act II of 1867).—The District Superintendent of Police gave a warrant under the Gambling Act (Bengal Act II of 1897) to D, a sub-inspector, to arrest persons found gambling in a certain house. In order to save two persons from legal punishment for having committed an offence under the Gambling Act in that house, D framed a first information and a special diary incorrectly. Held he was properly charged with, and found guilty of, having committed an offence under s. 218 of the Penal Code. The word "charged" in that section is not restricted to the narrow meaning of "enjoined by a special provision of law." An offence under the Gambling Act being an offence for which the District Superintendent of Police may arrest or by warrant direct an arrest is a cognizable offence within the meaning of s. 4, cl. (f), of the Criminal Procedure Code. The words "a police officer" in that clause do not mean "any and every police officer"; it is sufficient if the Legislature by any law limits the power of arrest to any particular class of police officers. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. 3. CONTRADICTIONARY STATEMENTS.

83. ————— Circumstances and intention of contradictory statement—Penal Code, s. 193.—The mere fact that a person has made a statement which contradicts a previous statement is not itself necessarily sufficient to bring him within s. 193, Penal Code. The circumstances under which, and the intention with which, the particular statement relied on by the prosecution is made, must in each case be considered before it can be held that the

84. ————— Weight to be given to contradictory statements.—To establish the offence of giving false evidence, direct proof of the falsity of the statement on which the perjury is assigned is essential. But, as legitimate evidence for this purpose, the law makes no distinction between the testimony of a witness directly falsifying such statement and the contradictory statement of the person charged, although not made on oath. Such a statement, when satisfactorily proved, is quite as good evidence in proof of the charge as the criminatory statement of a person charged with any other offence, and on precisely the same ground,—that it is an admission of the accused person inconsistent with his innocence. As to the weight to be given to contradictory statements, the sound rule is that a charge of perjury is not maintainable upon proof of one such statement not on oath, or more than one if proved by a single witness only, unless supported by confirmatory evidence tending to show the falsity of the statement in the charge. With respect to the kind or amount of confirmatory proof required, it must be considered in each case whether the particular evidence offered is sufficient to induce a belief in the truth of the contradictory statement or direct testimony. QUEEN v. 97. ————— Validity of conviction—Statements which cannot both be true.—It is not of itself sufficient to warrant a conviction for giving false evidence that an accused person has made one statement on oath at one time and a directly contradictory one at another. The charge must not only allege which of such statements is false, but the prosecutor must be prepared with confirmatory evidence independent of the other contradictory statement to establish the falsity of that which is impeached as untrue. Reg. v. Jackson, 1 Lewis, C. C., 270; Reg. v. Wheatland, 8 C. & P., 339; and Reg. v. Harris, 5 B. & Ald., 326, referred to. S. 456 of Act X of 1872 (Criminal Procedure Code) is no authority for framing against a person accused of giving false evidence who has made one statement on oath on one occasion, and a directly contradictory one on oath on another occasion, a charge in the "alternative," that word, as used in that section, meaning that where the facts which can be proved make it doubtful what particular description of offence an accused person has committed, the charges may be so varied or alternated as to guard against his escaping conviction through technical difficulties. Held therefore, where three persons were committed for trial jointly charged with "having on or about the 26th September 1881, or the 18th October 1881, being legally bound upon oath to state the truth, knowingly on those days, regarding the same subject, Charge in alternative of two different offences under two different sections of Penal Code—False information to public servant—Criminal Procedure Code, ss. 225, 232, 233, 537—Penal Code (XLV of 1860), ss. 182 and 193—Forest Act, VII of 1878.—The accused was charged, in the alternative, by the trying Magistrate as follows: I, W. W. Drew, Magistrate, first class, hereby charge you, Ramji Sajabarao, as follows: That you, on or about the 18th day of October 1882, at Nandarpada, stated that you had seen Vishnu Vaman and Mahadu Lakshman carrying teakwood from Gohe Forest to Narayan Ramchandra, range forest officer, and on 14th February 1885 you stated on oath before the first class Magistrate at Pen, at the trial of those persons, that you did not see where they had brought the wood from, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 182 or s. 193 of the Penal Code (XLV of 1860) and within my cognizance; and I hereby direct that you, Ramji Sajabarao, be tried by the said Court on the same charge." At the trial the accused asserted the truth of the former of these two statements, and denied having made the other. The Magistrate was unable to find which of them was false, and convicted the accused, in the alternative, either under s. 182 or s. 193 of the Penal Code (XLV of 1860). Held that the charge was bad in law, being an alternative charge in a form forbidden by s. 233 of the Criminal Procedure Code (X of 1882), which directs that for every distinct offence of which any person is charged there shall be a separate charge. Nor could the accused be tried upon a charge framed in the alternative as in the form given in sch. V-XXVIII-(4) of the Criminal Procedure Code (X of 1882); for, upon the facts alleged, there was no way of charging him with one distinct offence on the ground of self-contradiction. He could not successfully be charged under s. 193 of the Penal Code (XLV of 1860) on contradictory statements because he only made one deposition in which there was no discrepancy; and,

similarly, he could not be charged under s. 182 of the Penal Code, for he only once gave information to a public servant. Held also that, having regard to ss. 225, 232, and 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code (X of 1882), the accused, convicted upon such a charge, must be held to have been misled in his defence, and his conviction and sentence reversed. There was no finding as to which of the contradictory statements was false. Penal Code, s. 193—Criminal Procedure Code, sch. V, No. XXVIII-(4)—Assignment of false statement not necessary—English law.—In a charge under s. 193 of the Penal Code, it is not necessary to allege which of two contradictory statements upon oath is false, but it is sufficient (unless some satisfactory explanation of the contradiction should be established) to warrant a conviction of the offence of giving false evidence to show that an accused person has made one statement upon oath at one time, and a directly contradictory statement at another. Queen v. Zamirah, B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 521; 6 W. R., Cr., 65; Queen v. Palany Chetty, 4 Mad., 51; and Queen v. Mahomed Hoomayoon Shah, 18 B. L. R., 324, followed. Emress v. Niaz Ali, I. L. R., 5 All., 17, overruled. Per DUTHOIT, J.—Every possible presumption in favour of a reconciliation of the two statements should be made, and it must be found that they are absolutely irreconcilable before a conviction can be had upon the ground that one of them is necessarily false. The two statements were contradictory, and no evidence was given to show which of them was false. It was not proved that the statement made to the police-officer was made in answer to questions put by him, and the only evidence given at the trial with regard to the inquiry upon which the police officer was engaged was to the effect that an enquiry was being made about the burning of a house. The jury acquitted the accused, and the case was referred to the High Court by the Sessions Judge, who disagreed with the verdict of acquittal. Held that the verdict was right. Before a conviction in such a case can be sustained, it must, having regard to the provisions of s. 161 of the Criminal Procedure Code, be clearly proved by the evidence that the statement made to the police-officer was a statement in answer to questions put to the accused by the investigating police-officer, and in the absence of such evidence, even though the statement were proved to be false, a conviction could not be sustained. Held, further, that in such a case it is also necessary for the prosecution to establish that the police-constable was making an investigation under Ch. [8 Mad., 38]

Wrongful arrest under decree already satisfied.—Mistake of officers of the Court—Cause of action—Good faith—Limitation Act, XI of 1877, s. 22 and sch. II, art. 19.—On the 27th June 1883, the plaintiff was arrested by a bailiff of the Small Cause Court at Bombay under a writ of arrest for the amount of a decree obtained by the defendant on the 2nd May 1883 against the plaintiff. On arrest, the plaintiff informed the bailiff that the money due under the decree had already been paid, as was the fact. Plaintiff could not produce the receipt of payment, and the bailiff refused to raise the arrest until payment was made. The plaintiff thereupon paid the money under protest, and was set at liberty. The mistake was subsequently discovered, and the money was refunded to the plaintiff. It appeared that, prior to plaintiff's arrest, defendant's clerk had enquired of the head cashier of the Small Cause Court if the amount of the decree had been paid, but was told it was not, and a certificate of non-payment was issued. In conformity with the usual practice of the Court, the chief clerk of the Court, on receipt of the certificate, issued the writ of arrest under the seal of the Small Cause Court, and the plaintiff was arrested. In March 1884, the plaintiff presented a petition to the High Court for leave to sue as pauper, and claimed Rs25,000 from first defendant as damages for the wrongful arrest. When the petition came on for enquiry into the pauperism of the plaintiff, the presiding Judge was of opinion that it disclosed no cause of action, and the plaint was returned to the plaintiff to be amended, but at the same time allowed to be filed. The plaintiff subsequently desired to add as party-defendants the cashier and the chief clerk of the Small Cause Court, and on 5th July 1884 took out a summons calling upon the defendants to show cause why his amended plaint should not be received on the file of the Court in place of his first petition. It was contended for the cashier and the chief clerk of the Small Cause Court that the suit against them was barred by limitation. Held, as regards the first defendant, that the plaint should be rejected, as there was no bad faith, fault, or irregularity on the part of the first defendant so as to make him responsible for the wrongful arrest. The plaintiff's imprisonment having taken place under a warrant of the Court issued in regular manner, and such Court being of competent jurisdiction, the plaintiff had no cause of action as against the first defendant; the error was wholly and entirely the error of the officers of the Small Cause Court. Held also, as regards the cashier and the chief clerk of the Small Cause Court, that the plaintiff's suit was barred, as more than one year had elapsed from the date of the termination of the plaintiff's imprisonment. *FISHER v. FALSE PERSONATION.

1. Personation before Registrar—Registration Act (XX of 1866), ss. 93 and 94—Penal Code, s. 419.—A vendor proceeded in company with three persons to Dacca to register her deed of sale. Falling ill on the way, the three companions went to the Registrar's office; one of them there personated the vendor, and got registry of the deed. She was convicted of cheating by false personation, and the other two of abetting that offence. Held on revision that, as there was no intention apparent on the part of the accused to injure or defraud any one, the convictions should have been under ss. 93 and 94 of Act XX of 1866, and not under s. 419 of the Penal Code. *QUEEN v. 3. Penal Code, s. 205—Personating imaginary person.—Under s. 205 of the Penal Code, it is criminal to personate an imaginary person. QUEEN v. BITTOO KAHAR [1 Ind. Jur., O. S., 123]

4. Fraudulent gain.—Fraudulent gain or benefit to the offender is not an essential element of the offence of false personation under s. 205 of the Penal Code, and a conviction for such offence may be upheld, even where the personation is with the consent of the person personated. EX-PARTE SUPPAXON . 1 Mad., 450

5. Personating imaginary person.—To constitute the offence of false personation under s. 205 of the Penal Code, it is not enough to show the assumption of a fictitious name; it must also appear that the assumed name was used as a means of falsely representing some other individual. Reg. v. Bittoo Kahar, 1 Ind. Jur., O. S., 123, dissented from. QUEEN v. KADAR BAYATTAN [4 Mad., 18]

FALSE PERSONATION—concluded.

6. ————— Intention of falsely personating.—It is necessary to a conviction for false personation, under s. 205 of the Penal Code, that the accused should have assumed the name and character of the person he is charged with having personated. The fact that he presented a petition in Court in the name of that individual held, under the circumstances of the case, to be insufficient to show any intention of falsely personating such person. QUEEN v. NARAIN ACHARY . 8 W. R., Cr., 80

7. ————— Evidence as to identity of heirs of estate.—Where the main question was whether, in fact, the heir to an estate, a minor in possession through the manager under the Court of Wards, had been, as the plaintiff alleged him to have been, put forward by false personation, a Divisional Court of appeal decided in favour of the defence, and dismissed the suit. Pending this decision, a Full Bench disposed of questions of law as to the admissibility in evidence in this suit of the judgment and record in a prior suit; in which it had been found, as a fact, that there had been at one time in existence an heir born of the parentage which the defence in this suit alleged to be that of the minor defendant. It was disputed in the present suit whether the minor defendant was the same individual whom his alleged mother, the defendant in the former suit (there being the same plaintiff in both suits), stated to be her son; also whether, if that identity were proved, the suit would be barred as res judicata. This latter question was decided in the negative by the Full Bench, which held the judgment in the former suit not to be conclusive upon the present one, but also held the record to be admissible. There was no appeal from that decision; and on an appeal from the decree of the Divisional Court, the Judicial Committee affirmed on the facts the decree made. *PALAKDHARI SINGH v. 1. Right of ferry—Right of private ferry.—The right of establishing a private ferry and levying tolls is recognized in British India. PARMESHWARI PROSHAD NARAIN SINGH v. MAHOMED SYUD . I. L. R., 6 Cal., 608; 7 C. L. R., 504

2. Right of owner of both banks of a river.—The mere fact of being the owner of both banks of a river does not give the right of ferry. SOFIA MARDHA v. NODO KISHORE [2 W. R., 290]

3. Right to establish new ferry—Right to cross river or jhil in other way than by ferry.—A stream, if navigable, is of itself a public highway. In the case of a stream, therefore, a riparian proprietor might start in a boat from any point on his own side and proceed to any point at which he would have a right to land on the other side. But in the case of a jhil, the soil and freehold of which is probably vested in some particular individual, persons might be in the habit of crossing it from point to point by means of a ferry-boat belonging to the owner, and indeed might have a right to do so. But such right, if it existed, would not lead to any inference that any proprietor of lands on the banks of the jhil would have any right to cross either way to the terminus of a public highway in any other manner than between the ascertained points and by the accustomed means, viz., the owner's ferry boat. HUNOOMAN DOSS v. SHAMACHURN BHUTTA [1 Hay, 423]

FERRY—continued.

4. Change in starting point owing to change in course of river.—The right to a ferry-ghaut cannot follow the starting point of the ferry wherever it may be carried by a change in the course of the river, unless the new position is within the possessor's own land. GORDON v. GOPPE SOONDURAN DOSSAN . 25 W. R., 53

5. Right to land at a ghaut as part of right of ferry—Form of suit.—A plaintiff may recover possession of a ferry of which he has been dispossessed by the defendant, though the form of his action may have been for obtaining possession of a ghaut. The right to ply the ferry may include also a right at certain seasons of the year to land upon or start from a part of the river bank not included in the land taken for the ferry. BRUJO KISHORE CHOWDHRAIN v. BILASH MOHAR CHOWDHRAIN . 5 W. R., 195

6. Dispute concerning ferry including land and water over which it plies—Possession, Order of Criminal Court as to.—The right to a ferry, i.e., the right to carry passengers to and fro, cannot be treated apart from the possession of the lands used on either side of the stream for the purpose of landing them. It is a proper case to be dealt with under s. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898) where the subject-matter of dispute is a ferry including the land and water upon which the right of ferry is exercised. HURBULLUR NARAIN SINGH v. LUCHMENWAR PRASAD SINGH . I. L. R., 26 Cal., 188 [3 C. W. N., 49]

But see HURBULLUR NARAIN SINGH v. BAJRANG DASS . 3 C. W. N., 149

7. Rights of private ferry—Invasion of right of ferry by order of Magistrate—Beng. Reg. VI of 1819.—In a suit to maintain the old boundaries of a ferry which had been invaded by an order of the Magistrate extending the boundaries of a public ferry, the plaintiffs asserted that they had theretofore, without charging toll, transported in their own boats or in boats hired by them their labourers and cultivators and implements of husbandry, and that, in the exercise of this right, the order of the Magistrate was injurious to them. Held that the order of the Magistrate extending the boundaries of the public ferry was an invasion of their ancient right to cross in whatever ferry boat they liked, as by s. 6 of the Regulation (VI of 1819) persons are prohibited from employing ferry boats plying for hire at, or in the vicinity of, a public ferry, without the previous sanction of the Magistrate or Joint Magistrate, thus making persons dependent on the public ferry and liable to whatever toll may be levied on the public ferry. RAM GORIND SINGH v. MAGISTRATE OF GHAZIPORE [4 N. W., 146]

8. Infringement of rights of ferry—Right to restrain party starting second ferry—Crown grant—User—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), ss. 23, 26, 27, 28—Nuisance—Cause of action.—In a suit brought to establish the right to a ferry franchise and to restrain the working of a rival

ferry.—Held that there is nothing in the law of Bengal as it was before the acquisition by the British Government or in the Regulations before or after 1793 to show that any person is entitled to claim a monopoly of a right of ferry by prescription or by any other means than a grant from the Crown. To such a monopoly Part IV (ss. 26, 27, 28) of the Limitation Act of 1877 relating to the acquisition of ownership by prescription is not applicable. The franchise of a ferry is not necessarily appurtenant to land, but where a right of ferry was claimed as appurtenant to certain villages.—Held that the grant of such right by the Crown would not be destroyed by mere non-user without waiver, nor by the running of an opposition ferry. The franchise would continue as long as the grant continued, and until the person who set up an opposition ferry could show a Crown grant or give evidence from which a Crown grant could be presumed, the cause of action would remain. The disturbance of a right of ferry is in the nature of a nuisance (Ford v. Ford, 2 Saunders, 172), and the cause of action in the case of the violation of this right is a continuing wrong within s. 23 of the Limitation Act. NITYAHARI ROY v. DUNNE . . . I. L. R., 18 Calo., 652

9. ———— Management of ferry—Beng.
Reg. VI of 1819, s. 13, cl. 2.—Cl. 2, s. 13, Regulation VI of 1819, only applies where there has been an accident. Where the Magistrate thinks that a ferry is improperly kept and is in a dangerous condition, he should proceed under s. 4. QUEEN v. DEBYANTOOLLAH . . . 7 W. R., Cr., 32

10. ———— Proprietary rights, Interference with—Dispossession.—There are proprietary rights in a private ferry of such a nature that another party may not so interfere with the profits arising therefrom by running a boat, if not exactly on the same line, at least within such a distance as for all practical purposes would be the same as if it were on the same line. Preventing parties from crossing in a person's ferry and driving his men away amount to dispossession. KISHOREE LALL ROY v. GOKOOL MONEE CHOWDHRAIN [16 W. R., 281

11. ———— Suit to re-open ferry—Bengal Act I of 1866, s. 2.—A suit to re-open a ferry which had been included in a settlement of an estate obtained by plaintiff from Government, but which had been closed by orders of the Assistant Magistrate, was held not to be maintainable, the ghaut where plaintiff wished to re-open it being within two miles of the place at which a public ferry was established. RAM JEWAN SINGH v. COLLECTOR AND MAGISTRATE OF SHAHABAD . . . 15 W. R., 132

12. ———— Rival ferry—Interference with existing ferry.—A rival ferry cannot be set up so as to interfere with proprietary rights in an existing ferry, that is to say, under circumstances involving direct competition with such ferry. *NARAIN SINGH ROY v. benefit arising out of land covered by water, comes within the definition of "immoveable property" set out in the General Clauses Act (I of 1868), and is therefore immoveable property under s. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). RAM GOPAL BISACK v. NURMUDDIN alias N'OR MAHAMED MINITL . . . I. L. R., 20 Calc., 446

3. ——— Right to soil beneath water—Right to jalkar.—The right to a jalkar by no means involves a right to the soil when the jalkar is either dried or filled up by accumulation of soil. RADHA MOHUN MUNDOL v. NERL MADHAB MUNDOL . . . 24 W. R., 200

4. ——— Right to soil and water in one person—Interest in the soil.—Though the right of jalkar does not imply any interest in the soil, yet where it is found as a fact that both water and land are the property of the zamindar as such, the two rights are not to be separated. CHUNDER COOMAR ROY v. BURDA KANT ROY

5. ——— Right to tank—Fishing in tank.—The exercise of the right of fishing in a tank is no proof of ownership in the tank. ERZOZAH HOSSEIN v. HURER PERSHAD SINGH

[5 W. R., 261

6. ——— Right in the soil—"Interest in land"—Road Cess Act (Beng. Act X of 1871).—A jalkar does not impart any interest in the soil itself, and therefore a patni of a jalkar is not an "interest in land" within the meaning of the definition in the District Road Cess Act. DAVID v. GRISH CHUNDER GHRA

7. ——— Settlement of jalkar.—There is no such broad proposition of law as that the settlement of a jalkar implies no right in the soil. RAKHAI CHURN MUNDOL v. WATSON & Co. . . . I. L. R., 10 Calc., 50

8. ——— Jalkar drying up—Right of holder of jalkar.—When a jalkar dries up, the dried land does not, as a matter of course, become the right of the holder of the jalkar. BISSEN LALL DOSS v. KHYEUNISSA BEGUM . . . 1 W. R., 79

9. ——— Drying up of jhil.—By pottah certain land was leased, and a right of jalkar or fishery in a bhil or lake was granted on payment of certain jamma. The bhil became permanently dried up. Held that the grant being merely of the fishery, the lessee acquired no interest in the soil, and the lessor was entitled to re-enter on the land formerly covered with the water of the bhil. *SEROOP CHUNDER MOZOOMDAR v. 10. ——— Change in course of river—Right of owner of soil.—If a river merely changes its course, the old dry course of the river must be taken to have become private property; and as incident to and part of the same, the owner of the soil is entitled to all bhils or ponds, gulfs, or damoorees

11. ———— Jalkar—Navigable river.—The jalkar, or right of fishing, in a navigable river is not affected by reason of the river having merely changed its course. Gray v. Anund Mohun Moitra, W. R., 1864, 108, followed. Sibassury Daboo v. Lukhy Daboo, 1 N. W. R., 88, distinguished. TARINI CHURN SINHA v. WATSON & Co. I L. R., 17 Cal., 963

12. ———— Joint right of fishery.—A co-proprietor cannot be sued for trespass for fishing in a jalkar in which he and the other proprietors were entitled to fish, merely because the jalkar, by a change in the course of the river, ran over the land which was allotted to the plaintiff under a butwara. In such a suit the plaintiff cannot obtain a share of the fish on the ground that he had a share in the jalkar. GOBIND CHUNDER SHAHA v. ARDOOL GUNTY 6 W. R., 41

13. ———— Drying up of river—Land accreting subject to right of fishery.—In a suit to establish a right of fishery in a river, where the right was not opposed and the plaintiffs obtained a decree, the lower Appellate Court, which also found that the disputed body of water south of the river occupied what was once its bed and was connected with the river by a narrow inlet, reversed the decree on the ground that it was possible this communication might silt up later in the year. Held that the lower Appellate Court's decision was wrong in law, and that on the finding the plaintiffs were entitled to a decree. Held also that, if the flowing stream dried up and the defendants acquired a right to the land by the law of accretion, that right would be subject to the exercise by the plaintiffs of their prior right of fishery. KALEN SOONDER ROY v. DWARKANATH MOJOOMDAR 18 W. R., 460

14. ———— Diversion of flow of stream—Increase and decrease in flow of water.—It matters not whence the water in which A has a right of fishery comes. A's right is not lessened, nor B's increased, because a portion of the water formerly flowing in A's channel has been diverted from it, and because the water of B's river now flows through it. NOBIN CHUNDER ROY CHOWDERY v. RADHA PRANEE DEBIA 6 W. R., 17

15. ———— Rights of jalkar in flooded lands.—The gradual flooding of a talukh may destroy the talukhdar's right of ownership in that portion of it which is so covered with water and vest the rights of fishery therein in the owner of the adjoining jalkar. But if by a sudden irruption of the river a definite and ascertainable area is submerged at once, that area does not become lost to the talukhdar, nor does the owner of the adjoining jalkar become entitled to extend his fishery rights over it. SIBSSTRY DABEE v. LUKHY DABEE 1 W. R., 68

16. ———— Restriction on fishery rights by owners of bed of river—Limiting area of water.—The owners of the bed of a river when dry are not entitled so to use that bed as to injure the jalkar rights which others have in it when full by restricting the area over which the water may flow. SRIKANT BHUTTACHARJI v. KEDAR NATH MOOKERJEE [8 C. L. R., 242]

17. ———— Interference with right—Erection of bund.—A has no right to erect a bund on his own land so as to intercept the passage of fish in a natural stream, and thereby render B's right of fishery less profitable. But if the bund has existed for many years without complaint, B's right of fishery must be deemed subject to A's right to keep up the bund. RAM DASS SURMAN v. SONATTEN GOONOO [W. R., 1864, 275]

18. ———— Jalkar rights in pergunnah—Right of owner of pergunnah.—A proprietor of the entire jalkar rights of a pergunnah is entitled to fish in any natural water-course, or any jhil or pond not made by human agency. KHOCBOONAMOYE CHOWDHRAIN v. JOY SENKER CHOWDERY [W. R., 1864, 267]

19. ———— Presumption of right of fishery from long possession of tank.—Where a person is found to have been from of old in possession of a tank, it may be presumed that he is entitled to the fish therein, although there be no actual proof that he has asserted his property in the fish by fishing. HUR PERSHAD ROY v. BADREE NARAIN GIR [1 N. W., 14]

20. ———— Exercise of right of fishery from permanent settlement—Open channels in river.—A party owning the right of fishery in a river from the time of the permanent settlement is at liberty to exercise that right in the open channels and also in all closing or closed channels abandoned by the river up to the time when the channels become finally closed at both ends, i.e., so long as fish can pass to and fro. KRISHNENDRO CHOWDERY v. SIKROMOTI [21 W. R., 27]

21. ———— Adverse right of—Exercise of right of fishery—Right to possession.—When a person exercises the right of fishing in a tank adversely for twelve years, his right to fish becomes absolute and indefeasible. LUCKHIMONY DASSEE v. KORNNA KANT MOITRO 3 C. L. R., 509

22. ———— Dispute as to fishery rights—Possession—Title.—In a dispute about jalkars between the proprietors of a neighbouring estate, where the title-deeds of the two parties do not specially mention the particular pieces of land or water in contest, the title of the parties must depend on the fact as to which of them has been in possession. SHAMA SOONDURKE DEBIA v. COLLECTOR OF MALDAH [12 W. R., 164]

23. ———— Right of fishery in navigable river, Proof of—Private against public right.—When the exclusive jalkar right in a navigable river is set up against the ordinary rights of the

State and the community, it must be established by clear and strong proof. BAGRAM v. COLLECTOR OF BHULLOOA. COLLECTOR OF RENGPORE v. RAMJADUB SHIN W. R., 1864, 243

24. ———— Right of fishery in navigable river.—The right of fishing in a navigable river does not belong to the public, nor is the Government prohibited by any law from granting to individuals the exclusive right of fishing in such a river. CHUNDER JALEAH v. RAM CHURN MOOKERJEE [15 W. R., 212]

25. ———— Right of Government.—Semhle—The Government may have an exclusive right of fishery in a navigable river. ACHUMBIT JHA v. JEWUN 11 C. L. R., 11

26. ———— Jalkar—Private and public rights.—A private right of fishery in a tidal navigable river must, if it exists at all, be derived from the Crown and established by very clear evidence, as the presumption is against any such private right. Quere—Whether such right can be created at all. A mere recital in quinquennial papers that a person is the owner of jalkar rights in a zamindari permanently settled with him by Government is not sufficient to give to such person a right of fishery in a public navigable river; any right granted under such word "jalkar" would be perfectly satisfied if construed to apply exclusively to a right to fish within enclosed water, such as a jhil. PROSUNNO COOMAR SIRCAR v. RAM COOMAR PAROOFY [I. L. R., 4 Calc., 53]

27. ———— Right of fishery in tidal river—Prescription.—The right of the public to fish in tidal waters in British India may be curtailed by an exclusive privilege acquired by grant or prescription by certain persons within certain limits. Such an exclusive privilege, being an infringement of the general rights of the public, could be acquired by a period of enjoyment which would suffice for the acquisition of an easement against the Crown. VIRESA v. TATAYYA I. L. R., 8 Mad., 467

28. ———— Right of fishery in tidal navigable river—Grant of rights by Crown.—Grant, where there is no title by prescription, must be proved.—Evidence as to nature and extent of grant.—The exclusive right of fishery in tidal navigable rivers may be granted by the Crown to private individuals. Such a right must ordinarily be proved either by proof of a direct grant from the Crown or by prescription. In the absence of title by grant or prescription in persons alleging themselves to be the holders of a jalkar under an ijara, the mere payment of rent by fishermen to former ijaradars does not estop such fishermen from disputing the rights of the alleged holders; but such payment for the use of the jalkar right is strong evidence of the rights of the alleged holders of the ijara, and of acquiescence in their title. In the case of a grant of a jalkar, in ascertaining what the boundaries of the jalkar are, or what rights of fishery are contained within those boundaries, whether the subject of the grant be in tidal navigable rivers or not, the Courts should be guided by the same rules of evidence

as would be applicable for the purpose of determining the nature and extent of any other grant. Per PRINSEP and PIGOT, JJ.—Unless the boundaries given in a grant of a jalkar clearly indicate to the contrary, a grant of a jalkar would not ordinarily include the right of fishery in tidal navigable rivers. HORI DAS MAL v. MAHOMED JAKI [I. L. R., 11 Calc., 434]

29. ———— User—Prescription.—Plaintiffs claimed right to catch fish in a tidal river at a certain place by putting up stake nets across the river. This right was alleged to be based on custom which was not denied by defendants, and user for thirty years was proved. The claim was decreed. Held that plaintiffs were not bound to prove sixty years' exclusive user to support their claim. NARAYAYTA v. SAMI I. L. R., 12 Mad., 43

30. ———— Right of Government in navigable rivers and fishery therein—Grant by Government of right to private individuals.—As regards this side of India, the bed of a tidal navigable river is vested in the Crown; and the right of fishery in such river, as also the bed of the river itself, may be granted by Government (whether it be in the exercise of their prerogative as the Crown or as representing the public) to private individuals to be held by them as private property, subject to the right of navigation and such other rights as the public has in such rivers. *See d. 31. ———— Right of fishing in the sea—Right of suit—Right of the Crown—Public rights.—Rights of the Crown and of the public in the waters and the subjacent soil of the sea discussed. The right of the public to fish in the sea, whether it and its subjacent soil be or be not vested in the Crown, is common, and is not the subject of property. That right, in certain portions of the sea, be regulated by local custom. Members of the public, exercising the common right to fish in the sea, are bound to exercise that right in a fair and reasonable manner, and not so as to impede others from doing the same; and conduct which prevents another from a fair exercise of his equal right, if special injury thereby results to him, is actionable. BABAN MAYACHA v. FOREIGN COURT.

Private International Law—Suit in British Court on foreign judgment—Territorial jurisdiction—British subject—Domicile—Nationality—Decree of Foreign Court as evidence in Court in British India—Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1852), s. 18.—A foreign Court has no jurisdiction over a person who is a British subject domiciled and residing in British India, who was not within the territorial jurisdiction of that Court either at the time when a suit was brought against him or previously, and who never subjected himself by any act of his, such as by appearing and defending the suit, to the jurisdiction of that Court. A decree passed by a foreign Court against such a person cannot be given effect to in a Court in British India. Even if there be in such a case any special territorial legislation giving jurisdiction to the foreign Court, such legislation cannot be recognized by a Court in British India. Nationality is determined by birth on the soil, and not by citizenship by descent. There is a distinction between a case in which a defendant puts forward a foreign judgment as a bar to a suit under s. 18 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and a case in which a plaintiff seeks to enforce a foreign judgment. In the former, it may fairly be supposed that the parties submitted to the jurisdiction of the foreign Court. Gardyal Singh v. Raja of Faridkot, I. L. R., 22 Cal., 222 : L. R., 21 I. [I. L. R., 13 Bom., 324]

1. — Execution of decree of foreign Court—Objections to foreign judgments.—The rule in the case of foreign judgments sought to be executed in our Courts is, that such judgments must finally determine the points in dispute, and must be adjudications upon the actual merits, and that they are not open to impeachment on the ground of want of jurisdiction, whether over the cause, the subject-matter, or the parties, or that the defendant was not summoned, or had no opportunity of defence, or that the judgment was fraudulently obtained. SREENIVAS BUKSHI v. GOPALCHUNDER SAMUNT [15 W. R., 500]

2. — Suit against person in representative capacity.—The plaintiff obtained a judgment in a French Court against the father (now deceased) of the defendant. Plaintiff sued defendant on that judgment as representative of his father in the French Court. The defendant pleaded that the bond on which that judgment was obtained was not genuine. Judgment was given for the plaintiff in the French Court with costs. The plaintiff brought the present suit on that judgment. The lower Appellate Court decreed for the plaintiff against the defendant personally for the full amount of the decree in the French Court and interest. Held that the defendant was bound by the judgment in the French Court against him as representative of his father and personally bound to pay all costs awarded against him; but that, in giving effect to the French judgment, it was to be executed according to the rules of the Civil Procedure Code, which, in the absence of proof of assets received by a representative of a deceased, only gives a decree against the defendant as representative to be levied from the assets of the deceased. KANDASAMI PILLAI v. MOIDIN SAIB [I. L. R., 2 Mad., 337]

3. — Procedure in giving effect to foreign judgment—Proof of service of process—Notice, Service of, on contributory of Company.—Courts in British India, when called upon to give effect to a foreign judgment, should insist upon a strict proof of the validity and service of summonses and other processes alleged to have emanated from a foreign Court, and made a foundation for a liability to be enforced here by Courts that have no cognizance of the case on its merits. KDULJI BURJORJI v. MANEKJI SORABJI PATEL [I. L. R., 11 Bom., 241]

4. — Execution of decrees—Foreign decrees—Execution in British India of decrees of Courts of Native States—Evidence—Certified copies of foreign judicial records—Cooh Behar, Execution in British India of decrees passed by Courts of.—A decree of the Court of the Civil Judge of Cooh Behar was sent for execution to the Court of the District Judge of Rungpore. The copy of the record was signed by the sheristadar instead of by the Judge himself. Upon receipt of the decree by the Subordinate Judge, a notice under s. 248 of the Civil Procedure Code was served on the judgment-debtor, calling on him to show cause why the decree should not be executed, and an order was forthwith issued for the attachment of his property. The judgment-debtor appeared and objected that the copy of the record was not properly certified, and therefore that the whole of the execution-proceedings were bad. The Subordinate Judge ordered that the record be sent back to the Cooch Behar Court through the District Judge in order that a certificate might be given in proper form, and directed that the other points raised should be decided after the return of the papers. On appeal it was urged that the order of the Subordinate Judge was made without jurisdiction, but the District Judge rejected the appeal. The judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court. Held that the Subordinate Judge acted properly in sending the record back to the Cooch Behar Court to be properly certified, and also that he should have set aside the execution-proceedings as being altogether void, but, as that formed no portion of the grounds of appeal urged in the lower Appellate Court, the appeal should be dismissed. GANER MAHOMED SARKAR v. TABINI CHARN CRUCKERBATTI

[I. L. R., 14 Calo., 546]

6. ——— *Suits in British Court on judgments and decrees of Courts established in recognised foreign States—Territorial jurisdiction of each separate State in personal actions—Civil Procedure Code (1882), ss. 431 and 434—Right of suit—Jurisdiction, being properly territorial and attaching, with certain restrictions, upon every person permanently or temporarily resident within the territory, does not follow a foreigner, after his withdrawal thence, living in another State. As to land within the territory, jurisdiction always exists, and may exist over moveables within it, and exists in questions of status or succession governed by domicile. But no territorial legislation can give jurisdiction, which a Court of a foreign State ought to recognize, over an absent foreigner owing no allegiance to the State so legislating. In a personal action, to which none of the above causes of jurisdiction apply, a decree pronounced by a Court of a foreign State, in absentem, the latter not having submitted himself to its authority, is by international law a nullity. Not to the Courts of the State in which the cause of action has arisen, nor in cases of contract to those of the locus solutionis, should resort be had by the plaintiffs, but to the Courts of the State in which the defendant resides, the Courts of the latter State having jurisdiction in all personal actions. Ex-parte decrees for money were made in the territories of the ruling Chief of Faridkot, a State in subordinate alliance with the Government of India, against a person who had been employed by that State within its territories, but had, before suit brought, relinquished his employment, had left the State, and was then, at the time when he was sued, resident in another State of which he was the domiciled subject. Held that these decrees were a nullity by international law, and could not receive effect in a British Indian Court. Becquet v. Macarthy, 2 B. & Ad., 951, distinguished. The judgment* of BLACKBURN, J., in Schibby v. Westenhols, L. R., 6 Q. B., 155, referred to and explained. There is no ground for supposing, as did one of the Courts below, that no suit will lie upon the judgment of a recognized foreign Indian State. GURDYAL SINGH v. RAJA OF FARIDKOT . . . I. L. 6. ——— *Private international law—Suit in British Court on foreign judgment—Territorial jurisdiction—British subject—Domicile—Nationality—Decree of foreign Court as evidence in Court in British India—Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), s. 13.—A foreign Court has no jurisdiction over a person who is a British subject domiciled and residing in British India, who was not within the territorial jurisdiction of that Court either at the time when a suit was brought against him or previously, and who never subjected himself by any act of his, such as by appearing and defending the suit, to the jurisdiction of that Court. 7. ——— *Decree "in absentem"—Submission to jurisdiction—Suit on judgment of foreign Court.—The plaintiff brought a suit in the French Court at Karikal against the defendant, a British subject, resident in British India. The defendant employed a vakil to defend the suit, but, on the case coming on for hearing, the vakil stated he had no instructions, and an ex-parte decree was passed. An application by the defendant to have the decree set aside was held to be time-barred. The plaintiff now brought a suit on the judgment of the French Court to recover the amount decreed to him. Held that the suit was not maintainable for the reason that the decree had been passed against the defendant in absentem by a foreign Court, to which he had not submitted himself. Semble Even if the foreign judgment had not been entirely invalid as against the defendant, the British Court would have had jurisdiction to disallow an item of claim allowed by the foreign Court on account of prospective damages which was unsupported by evidence. SIVARAMAN CHETTI v. FOREIGN COURT, JUDGMENT OF

- continued.

Maintainability of suit.—Plaintiff, having obtained a decree in a District Court in the province of Mysore, applied to that Court, in execution of the said decree, for an account of certain proceeds alleged to be due to him under the decree. The application having been refused, and the refusal being upheld by the Chief Court of Mysore, plaintiff now brought a suit for an account in the District Court of South Canara. Held that, as the foreign judgment on which the action purported to be brought was not a judgment for an ascertained sum of money, it constituted no foundation for an action. SMITH v. 10. ————— Native Courts, Suit on decree of—Suits in India on judgments of Courts in India—Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 434.—No suit is maintainable in any Court in British India founded upon the judgment of a Court situate in a Native State. The Courts of British India cannot enforce the decrees of any Native Courts, except as provided by s. 434 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act X of 1877. Under that section, the decrees of certain Native Courts may be executed in British India, as if they had been made by the Courts of British India. A suit will not lie in the Courts of India upon the judgment of any Court in British India. The only exception to this rule is in the case of judgments of a Court of Small Causes on which suits are permitted to be brought in the High Court in order to obtain execution against immoveable property. A foreign judgment creates an obligation belonging to the class of implied contracts. A Court which entertains a suit on a foreign judgment cannot institute an enquiry into the merits of the original action or the propriety of the decision. Quere—Whether suits on foreign judgments are maintainable in the Civil Courts of India. BHAVANISHANKAR SHERAKRAM v. 14. ————— Limitation—Cause of action—Act XIV of 1859.—In a suit brought upon a judgment in the French Court at Chandernagore,—Held that the period of limitation must be reckoned from the day on which the French decree was dated, and therefore in all Courts to which Act XIV of 1859 applied, such suit would be barred at the expiration of six years from that date. HEERAMONER DOSSEE v. 16. ————— Jurisdiction of foreign Court—Residence of defendant—Constructive residence.—The plaintiff, having obtained against defendant a judgment in the District Court of Kandy, now sued in British India to enforce it. It appeared that the defendant was domiciled and ordinarily resident in British India, and that he had not appeared to defend the suit at Kandy, and was not at the date of that suit, or subsequently, even temporarily resident in Ceylon; but he was a partner in a firm which carried on business at Kandy, and he was interested in lands at that place which he had visited once or twice. Held that the Court at Kandy had no jurisdiction over the defendant. NALLAKARUPPA SETTIAI v. 20. ————— Joint contract—Liability of partners—Judgment recovered against one partner—Res judicata—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 18 and 14.—The defendants were partners trading in the name of Vishnuram Gopinath and Company. On 6th July 1895, at Ahmedabad, the first defendant borrowed from the plaintiff, for the purposes of the partnership business, a sum of Rs. 10,000 and passed a khata in the name of his firm. On 25th April 1896, at Baroda, he passed another agreement to plaintiff, under which the plaintiff was to recover the debt due to him from the partners jointly and severally. On 2nd October 1896, plaintiff obtained a decree on an award against the first defendant in the Civil Court at Baroda for Rs. 13,909-4-0, and in execution of this decree he recovered a sum of Rs. 7,000. In 1897 plaintiff filed this suit in the Court of the first class Subordinate Judge at Ahmedabad to recover the balance, viz., Rs. 6,909-4-0, from all the partners (defendants Nos. 1 to 8). Defendants Nos. 6 to 8 resided in Baroda territory, the rest in British India; defendants Nos. 2, 3, and 4 defended the suit. The rest did not appear. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, holding, on the authority of King v. Hoare, 15 M. and W., 494, that the judgment of the Baroda Court against one partner (the first defendant) was a bar to a fresh suit against the other partners on the same cause of action. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court. Held that the principle of King v. Hoare did not apply, and that the suit was not barred. The Baroda Court had no jurisdiction over the defendants, who were British subjects residing in British territory. The judgment of the Baroda Court was therefore no bar to the present suit under s. 14 of the Code of Civil Procedure. LAKSHMISHANKAR DEVSHANKAR v. VISHNURAM

21. ————— Effect of foreclosure decree passed by a foreign Court—Lis pendens—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 52—Notice of existence of decree.—In 1887, K, who resided at Singapore, mortgaged certain lands in the Madura district to S, who sued and obtained a conditional foreclosure decree on the 13th June 1892 in the Supreme Court of Singapore. This decree became absolute on the 3rd October 1892. On the 12th August 1892, K hypothecated the said land to P. In a suit brought by S,—Held that the decree of a foreign Court cannot directly affect land situated in British India; that at the date of the mortgage there was no decree purporting to operate upon the land; that the doctrine of lis pendens was inapplicable. Quere—Whether P would have been bound if he had had notice of the existence of the conditional decree at the date of his mortgage. PALANI CHETTI v. 22. ————— Effect of adjudication of insolvency in French territory—French law—"Code de Commerce" of France, s. 443—Suit against insolvent for debt.—By s. 443 of the Code de Commerce the effect of an adjudication of insolvency in French territory is to deprive the insolvent of the possession and management of his property, which is entrusted to a syndic, against whom alone all suits in respect thereof must be brought. Held that, though the debt of an insolvent might not be extinguished by such a declaration of insolvency, so as to exempt him from future liability in respect of property which he might subsequently obtain, no suit could be brought against him in French territory, and, for that reason, outside French territory, so long as the adjudication of insolvency remained in force. *Quelin v. 23. ————— Effect of foreign judgment—Objection to jurisdiction, Waiver of—Limitation Act, 1871, s. 29; 1877, s. 29.—Where a defendant sued in a foreign tribunal takes no exception to the jurisdiction, he cannot question the jurisdiction afterwards, inasmuch as he has led the plaintiff to believe that the proceedings are allowed by him to be effectual, and encouraged the plaintiff to proceed in them instead of withdrawing from them and instituting proceedings elsewhere. Irregularity of procedure on the part of a foreign tribunal, which ordinarily proceeds in accordance with recognized principles of judicial investigation, is not a sufficient ground for refusing to give effect to its judgment. Where limitation bars the remedy, but does not destroy the right, the judgment of a foreign tribunal is not open to the objection that the suit (on a contract) was barred by the Law of Limitation applicable in the country where the contract was made. NALLATAMBI MUDALIAR v. PONNURAMI PILLAI. I. L. R., 2 Mad., 400

24. ————— Objection to jurisdiction, Waiver of—Cause of action.—If a party sued in a foreign tribunal, which has no jurisdiction except by virtue of its own peculiar laws, protests against the assumption of jurisdiction by that tribunal, but defends the suit to escape the inconvenience of being made liable to arrest and attachment of property in foreign territory, and appeals from the adverse decision of such tribunal to a foreign appellate tribunal without repeating his objection to the jurisdiction, his submission to the jurisdiction is not voluntary, and the judgment of the foreign tribunal does not constitute a valid cause of action in a Court of British India. *PARRY & Co. v. ————— Contract, Suit on—Making of contract—Cause of action.—A, a Hindu British subject, neither domiciled, resident, nor possessing property in the foreign State of Pudukkotta, casually resorted thither and there drew a bill for a sum found due to his creditor B, resident in that State. B sued A on this bill in the Civil Court of Pudukkotta and got a decree in his favour. B then sued A in the subordinate Court of Madura for enforcement of this decree. A pleaded that the Pudukkotta Court had no jurisdiction to pass the decree sued on, and that he had had no notice of the suit. It was found, on regular appeal, that A had had notice, and decided that the Pudukkotta Court had jurisdiction. Held, on special appeal, that the Civil Court of Pudukkotta had no jurisdiction to try the suit. That the mere making of a contract within the jurisdiction of a foreign Court does not necessarily render that Court competent to adjudicate upon all the obligatory relations which flow directly or indirectly from it. MA-THAPPA v. (b)—Cherrapoonjee Raj—Public and private rights—Succession to land in India—Intestate succession—Succession Act X of 1865, s. 5.—The "private rights" spoken of in s. 431, cl. (b), of the Code of Civil Procedure do not mean individual rights as opposed to those of the body politic or State, but those private rights of the State which must be enforced in a Court of Justice, as distinguished from its political or territorial rights, which must from their very nature be made the subject of arrangement between one State and another. They are rights which may be enforced by a foreign State against private individuals as distinguished from rights which one State in its political capacity may have against another State in its political capacity. Emperor of Austria v. Day, 30 L. J. Ch., 690. 2 Giff., 629; United States of America v. Wagner, L. R., 2 Ch. App., 582, approved of. There is nothing to prevent a foreign or feudatory State from holding immovable property in British India, and to such property the rule of intestate succession laid down in s. 5 of the Succession Act (Act X of 1865) does not apply. The State must be regarded as a quasi corporation which continues to exist as a State so long as it is recognized as such by Her Majesty, whatever the rule of succession to it may be and whatever may be its form of government. Case in which it was found on the facts that certain immovable property situated in British India, which had formerly belonged to the State of Cherrapoonjee, having been granted by a former Raja of that State to the defendant, was still the property of the State, on the ground that the Raja was not competent to alienate it, and that the defendant's plea of adverse possession and limitation was not supported by the evidence. *HAJON MANICK v. 2. ————— Lapse to the British Government of a foreign State in ceded territory—

Grant of lands therein—Construction of official correspondence—Obari, or abatement of revenue on the estate.—The State of Jalsun, in the territory ceded in 1804 by the Peishwa, lapsed in 1840 to the British Government. Before the lapse, the lands now in suit belonged to the Chief, and were in the hands of managers on his behalf. The last manager, the ancestor of the present parties, remained, after 1840, in possession of the estate till his death in 1880, having been continued therein for life in 1852. In 1867 the Government directed the continuance of the entire estate to "the loyal members of his family." Held that no proprietary interest in the estate had been shown to have belonged to the ancestors when Jalsun was a principality; that all that could be claimed by the defendants was derived from the Government which, after the lapse of the State, had the right at their discretion to control the descent of the estate, and had exercised this discretion.

FOREIGN STATE—concluded.

There had been no formal award; but on the true construction of the official correspondence, as to which the Courts below had differed, the Government first continued the possession of the ancestor for life, and afterwards conferred the inheritance, as to one moiety of the estate, upon the defendant, who was one of the sons of the original holder, and, as to the other moiety of the estate, upon the plaintiffs, who were the four brothers of the defendant, then living. The claim made by the plaintiffs, having been founded on a different title, was dismissed by the High Court. But this dismissal was accompanied by a declaration that the above grant had been made. This was now altered into a declaratory decree to the same effect with the direction that inquiry be made as to who were entitled to the plaintiffs' moiety, and further directions were reserved. *GOBIND RAO v. the Superintendent of the Jail to show cause why they should not be set at liberty. In the affidavits filed in showing cause against the rule the only reason suggested for their arrest was that they were connected with loose women residing in a certain district of Bombay. It was contended for the prisoners that their arrest and imprisonment were illegal (1) inasmuch as Act III of 1864 was ultra vires of the Indian Legislature; (2) that the Act, being intended only to secure the "peace and security" of British India, was in this case improperly applied. Held (1) that Act III of 1864 was not ultra vires of the Governor-General of India in Council; (2) that it was rightly applied in the case of the foreigners in question, although their residing in Bombay may not have been likely to have affected or endangered the peace and security of British India. Per STARLING, J.—S. 3 of Act III of 1864 gives the fullest power to the Government to order any foreigner to remove himself from British India. The Government is the sole judge of what is necessary for the peace and security of British India, and, if it acted in accordance with the letter of the Act, the Court could not inquire into the sufficiency of its reasons for so acting. *ALTER CAUFMAN v. s. 45—Drift and stranded timber, Right of Government, under s. 45, to collect and store, with obligation to notify—Meaning of "jal-kar"—Test of res judicata—Civil Procedure Code (1852), s. 13—Construction of decrees.—The object of Ch. IX of the Indian Forest Act, 1878, is to regulate the rights of owners, and not to deprive them of their property in drift and stranded timber and wood. S. 45 of that Act does not divest the owner of, or transfer to the Government, any right therein. Nor does anything in the Act affect the right of the Government to take possession and dispose of timber and wood whereof they are the undisputed owners. But, upon certain conditions only, the Government have a right to the possession of any drift and stranded timber and wood collected by their officers, which, however, may be claimed by the true owner, who may be a person holding a jalkar or water right, comprehending those things. The conditions are that the officers of Government shall store the timber in the manner, and issue the notifications, required by the Act. In case of such procedure not being followed, and the wood being treated as the property of the Government, the latter are, in the event of the wood being found not to belong to them, in no better position than any other trespasser. The title to collect given to the Government by the Act is coupled with, and dependent upon, the duty of giving notice to the public, in order that the true owner, whether he be a person from whom the wood has drifted away or the owner of a jalkar, or however he may be entitled, may claim the drifted timber in the manner, and within the time, prescribed by the Act. There is no presumptive ownership of the Government save where their officers collect and hold for the true owner, in the first instance, subject to the statutory duty of giving notice. The Government having taken possession of drift timber in the river Teesta as having an absolute right thereto, the zamindar, owning land on the bank, asserted by this suit his right to it, on the ground of his owning the jalkar where the river passed by, and through, his lands. This jalkar, as he showed, had been decreed in 1852 to his predecessor in estate, in a suit against the Government. Held that this term, signifying water right, was aptly used to include the right to drift and stranded timber as well as to fishing, or other interest of a similar kind on the produce of the river—a right decreed in the above suit. The rule is that where a final decree is couched in general terms, the extent to which it ought to be regarded as res judicata can only be determined by ascertaining what were the real matters of controversy in the cause. That the question of the right to drift and stranded timber was included in the jalkar decreed in 1852 was, in their Lordships' opinion, established by intrinsic evidence in the record of that suit. They concurred with the High Court that correspondence and orders by officers, of dates subsequent to the former decree, could not be received as aids to its construction. But the record showed that the right was in controversy before the Judge, and that he meant to include it in the jalkar, which he decreed. The zamindar's claim was therefore judged to be established. AMRITSWARI DEBI v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA. I. L. R., 24 Cal., 504.

ss. 54 and s. 25—Conviction of offence under Forest Act—Subsequent order for confiscation of boats—Confiscation a punishment—When such order should be made.—Certain accused persons were tried summarily and convicted under s. 25 of the Indian Forest Act, and sentenced to pay fines. By a subsequent order under s. 54 of the same Act their boats were confiscated. Held that under the terms of s. 54 an order of confiscation cannot be regarded as an order incidental on the conviction. The confiscation is by the terms of that section declared to be a punishment, for it is in addition to any other punishment prescribed for the offence. That, being a punishment, the order should have been passed simultaneously with the other punishment for the offence of which the accused have been convicted. EMRESS v. NATHU KHAN, I. L. ss. 75 and 76—Khoti tenure—Khoti khasgi land—Right to cut trees—Dunlop's proclamation—Right of Government to rescind proclamation—Crown grant, Construction of.—In 1824, by a proclamation, known as Dunlop's proclamation, it was declared that the owners of land in the Bhatnagiri District, on which teak and other forest trees were growing or should thereafter be grown, should be the owners of these trees and might dispose of them at their pleasure without any claim on the part of Government. In 1851, however, this proclamation was rescinded by a subsequent proclamation which declared that the "Government resumed, in regard to forest, all the seigniorial rights which it possessed previously to 1823." The accused was khot of the village of Azoli in the Ratnagiri District. He was charged, under s. 75, cl. (c), of the Indian Forest Act (VII of 1878), with the offence of cutting down two teak trees without obtaining the permission of Government as required by the rules framed by Government under the Forest Act. He contended that he was absolute owner of the trees under Duni p's proclamation. He was convicted, and applied to the High Court under its revisional jurisdiction. Held that the conviction must be reversed. The land on which the trees in question were growing was the khoti khasgi land of the accused, and he was therefore entitled to the benefit of Duni p's proclamation, by virtue of which the trees thereon became his property. Held also that Duni p's proclamation could not be withdrawn by Government. Collector of Ratnagiri v. Ganakarra Narayan Surra, 8 Bom., A. C. 1., followed. Per FULTON, J.—Khasgi land, of which the khot was actually in possession, was clearly within Duni p's proclamation, and it granted the right to teak and other trees in khasgi lands held by vatandar khots. . . . It is clear, too, that the right to trees, having once been conceded, could not be withdrawn by the proclamation of 1851, and it seems also manifest that the contention is untenable that the benefit of the first proclamation did not extend to the case of trees planted after its cancellation in 1851. Even though the khot may not be the proprietor of the soil in khoti khasgi lands, he is certainly the holder of an interest in it, and that interest, having in 1823 been increased by the concession of all trees which he might grow thereafter, could not subsequently be reduced by the withdrawal of the right to such trees. IN RE ANTAJI KESHAV TAMBE. . . s. 78—Refusal to serve as member of a panch—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 187.—A person was convicted under s. 187 of the Indian Penal Code for refusing, when called on by a forest guard, to serve as one of a panch for the purpose of drawing up a panchnama with reference to certain wood alleged to have been illegally cut in a reserved forest. Held that the conviction was illegal. The accused was not shown to be one of the persons contemplated by the first three paragraphs of s. 78 of the Indian Forest Act (VII of 1878), nor was the purpose for which he was called upon to give his assistance one of the purposes mentioned in cl. (a) to (d) of the section. He was therefore not legally bound to assist the forest guard. QUEEN-EMPERESS v. BABAJI. . . I. L. R., 22 Bom., 769

fender—Beng. Reg. XI of 1796, Sale under—Construction of Regulation.—Regulation XI of 1796, being a highly penal statute, should be construed strictly. As it makes no express provision for the case of joint proprietors of land, or persons jointly holding a sudder farm of land, in the absence of clear words indicating such an intention, it cannot be assumed that the Legislature intended to authorize the confiscation of the property of any person other than the delinquent. A sale under Regulation XI of 1796 does not extinguish under-tenures or incumbrances created by the delinquent or those through whom he claims. *JUGGMOHUN BUKSH v. ROY

[7 W. R., P. C., 18 : 11 Moore's L. A., 223

2. — Beng. Reg. XI of 1796—Forfeiture against some members of joint Hindu family.—Under Regulation XI of 1796, the Governor General in Council could pronounce an order of confiscation in cases of persons charged with offences of a criminal nature who should abscond or conceal themselves so as not to be found upon process issued against them. After the issuing of the attachment by the Court and the subsequent declaration of forfeiture, everything previous to the attachment must be presumed to have been regularly and legally done, unless such presumptions were rebutted by sufficient evidence. Where a forfeiture under Regulation XI of 1796 was declared against three or four brothers constituting a joint undivided Hindu family, —Held that the forfeiture did not enure for the benefit of the fourth brother, nor did it affect the rights of the fourth brother, who was entitled to his fourth share in all the ancestral property of the family, and that the widow of the ancestor was also entitled to maintenance. GOLAB KOONWAR v. COL-LECTOR OF BENARES

3. — Seizure and attachment under Act XXV of 1857 and IX of 1859—Confiscation of rebel's property.—The procedure in regard to the seizure and attachment of property under Act XXV of 1857, and the adjudication of claims to such property under Act IX of 1859, pointed out.
Held that it is not incumbent on a party aggrieved by acts done under these laws to bring a suit at all, but if he brings a suit, it must be brought within a year of the attachment or seizure complained of. A seizure within the meaning of s. 20, Act IX of 1859, is such a taking possession of the property forfeited as is referred to in s. 7, Act XXV of 1857, not merely formal but actual. *BYJNATH SINGH v.

property—Act XXV of 1857—Priority to Government.—Judgment-creditors having bond fide attachments upon property at the time that the property of their debtors become forfeited to Government under Act XXV of 1857 are entitled in priority to Government. ODDIT DASS v. GOVERNMENT

5. — Right of decree-holder.—A decree-holder is not entitled to have his decree satisfied by sale of the judgment-debtor's properties which have been confiscated by Government for rebellion, unless he can show that they were attached in execution of his decree before the confiscation. An attachment cannot be presumed to have existed or continued from the fact that there was a proclamation of sale before confiscation. RADHA BI-BEE v. GOVERNMENT

6. — Withholding of payment of annuity—Act IX of 1859, s. 18.— Plaintiff joined with the rebels and took a leading part with them. A reward was set upon him as a rebel leader, and after a time he was captured.
No formal proceedings were taken under ss. 2 and 7 of Act XXV of 1857 for adjudicating his property (which consisted of little more than an annuity) to be forfeited. The property charged with the annuity was in the hands of the Collector as the manager under the Court of Wards. The annuity was withheld, and was no longer regarded as a charge on the estate, but was treated as merged. Held that the mere withdrawal of the payment of annuity by those who had the management of the estate, which was charged with the payment, would be an illegal act in no way affecting the plaintiff's right; but as the withholding of the payment was under the authority and direction of the official who was authorized to make attachment of rebels' property, it was with reference to the nature of the property equivalent to an attachment or seizure, and could not be questioned except under the provisions of s. 18 of Act IX of 1859, notwithstanding there had been no adjudication of forfeiture. CHUNDA v. ROOP SINGH

7. — Forfeiture of share in joint Hindu family property—Mitakshara law—Act
XXV of 1857, s. 8.—B S, the father of the plaintiff and in possession of immoveable property subject to the Mitakshara law inherited from his ancestor, was on the 10th December 1857, after proceedings taken under Act XXV of 1857, declared to be a rebel, and it was ordered that all his property should be confiscated to Government. On the 16th April 1858, B S was arrested, and being tried and convicted on a charge of rebellion was sentenced to death.
The sentence was carried out on the 21st April, and an order was made on that day for the confiscation of his property. In a suit instituted by the plaintiff to recover the property,—Held that B S had such an interest in it as made it the subject of forfeiture under
s. 3, Act XXV of 1857, and the plaintiff therefore did not, on the death of B S, become entitled to his estate. *TRAKOOR KAPILNATH SARTI v. GOVERN-

9. ——— Queen's Proclamation, Effect of—Conviction for rebellion—Act XI of 1857, s. 1—Remission of punishment.—Where N and M were convicted of rebellion under Act XI of 1857, s. 1, and sentenced, the former to be transported for life and to have all his property confiscated and the latter to have all his property confiscated, the sentence of confiscation was held to be absolute, and not to depend upon the amount of punishment, and the fact of the punishment being remitted by the Governor General does not restore the property. The Government having left the property of the convicts in the hands of the Administrator General as administrator to the estate of the convicts' father whence it was derived, in whose hands it was allowed to accumulate pending a separate litigation in respect of that estate, while it asserted its right by virtue of the confiscation to other property of the convicts the title to which was undisputed, it was held that the Government had sufficiently declared and acted upon its intention to enforce the confiscation. The Queen's proclamation of amnesty (November 1858), coming after the conviction and confiscation, had not the effect of re-vesting in the convicts the property confiscated. Held also that the property in question, being Government paper, was liable to confiscation; and lastly, that N's widow was not entitled to maintenance out of the property confiscated by the State. GUNGA BASS v. HOGG. . . . 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 124

On 26th July 1871, the defendant was convicted, under s. 1 of Act XI of 1857 and also under s. 121 of the Penal Code, of abetting the waging of war against the Queen, and sentenced to transportation for life and forfeiture of all his property. The offence for which he was convicted was committed in September 1861. Held that the forfeiture took effect from the date of the commission of the offence, and therefore any attachment subsequently made was invalid. GANESH LALL v. 12. ——— Act X of 1858—Power of Government to cancel tenures and eject raiyats.—Act X of 1858 gave Government the power as to landed property acquired by confiscation thereunder (if it thought fit to exercise it) of ejecting raiyats. As to under-tenures, the words are of still stronger import. But it must be held rather to confer a power to cancel than absolutely and without act done to annul the tenures. DOORGA PRASHAD v. ZORAWIL. . . . 2 N. W., 75

13. ——— Act X of 1859, s. 7—Under-tenures.—The Legislature did not intend to include in the term "under tenures," in s. 7 of Act X of 1858, the holdings of raiyats, but employed that term in the sense in which it is commonly used in this part of India, as applying to tenures of a proprietary character inferior to the zamindari, but superior to the khatkaree tenure. Consequently such holdings were by that Act made voidable, but not absolutely void. The power of avoiding such holdings expired with the Act. BASIT ALI v. MAN SINGH. . . . 2 N. W., 140

14. ——— Procedure in forfeiture—Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, ss. 131, 132.—The procedure prescribed in ss. 131 and 132 of Act XXV of 1861 must be followed before an order confiscating property is made. BEHARY SHAHA v. NUBBY KHAN. . . . 9 W. R., Cr., 13

20. — Sale of forfeited property—

Condition of sale—Act of State—Right of suit against Government.—Where a sale of landed property, which has been executed by the Government, was made by Government without any restriction being attached to the original notice of sale, which stated that the highest bidder was to be the purchaser,—It was held that the Government could not, subsequent to the bid and the deposit of the earnest-money, impose any condition, but was bound to make over possession irrespective of the character of the highest bidder. In selling the property of rebels which it had confiscated, the Government does not perform an act of State, but stands in the situation of an individual selling his property by auction, and a suit may therefore be properly brought against the Government by the purchaser, if the Government refuses to give up possession or transfer the possession to another. *SHEO LALL BOHRE v. The Sessions Judge convicted the accused under ss. 471, 464 of the Penal Code. Held on appeal that, even supposing the accused had used the document knowing it not to be genuine, they could not be found guilty, as the intention of the accused was not to cause wrongful gain or wrongful loss to any one; their intention being to produce a false belief in the mind of the settlement officer that they were entitled to the dignity of "Luskur," and that this could not be said to constitute "an intention to defraud." A sanad conferring a title of dignity on a person is not a valuable security within the meaning of the Penal Code. JAN MAHOMED v. QUEEN-EMPERESS. WAKIS MEAH v. QUEEN-EMPERESS

9. ——— False assertion of title.—Dishonest and fraudulent intent.—A prosecutor in a case of forgery, in order to establish that a title has been asserted with a fraudulent or dishonest intent, must show that the accused had no reasonable ground for asserting the title, and that accused asserted the title dishonestly or fraudulently in the sense in which these terms are used in the Penal Code. QUEEN v. 12. ——— Intention to injure.—Penal Code, s. 463.—To constitute the offence of forgery as defined by s. 463 of the Penal Code, it is not sufficient to prove that in making the document in respect of which the offence is charged, the accused knew that the document might injure, but it must be proved that it was his intention that it should injure another. FEDA HOSSEIN v. 25. ———— False entry in public record—Penal Code, ss. 192, 465, 466.—S. 466 of the Penal Code is not intended to apply to cases where a public officer, or a person acting for a public officer, whose duty it is to make entries in a public book, knowingly makes a false entry, but to cases where a certificate or other document is forged by some unauthorized person with a view to make it appear that it was duly issued by a public officer. The accused, in order to save an estate from forfeiture, made a false entry of rent received in a public book kept by him for the purpose of informing the Collector as to the rents which had been paid into the Collectorate, and as to what estates the rents were in arrear, so that he might take steps to enforce payment, and was convicted by the Sessions Judge of an offence under s. 465 of the Penal Code. Held on appeal that the accused ought properly to have been convicted under s. 192 of the Code; the provisions of that section not being confined to false evidence to be used in judicial proceedings. IN THE MATTER OF JUGGUN LALL

27. ———— Fabrication of a document to conceal a contemporaneous or past embezzlement—Penal Code, ss. 463, 464, 467, and 471—"Dishonestly"—"Fraudulently."—An accused person who was in the service of zamindars, and whose duty it was to pay into the Collectorate Government revenue due in respect of their estates, immediately before the due date of a kist received from them a certain sum of money with no specific instruction as to its application. On receipt of that money, he paid a portion only of it into the Collectorate on account of the revenue, and having done so, he then altered the challan given back to him showing the amount actually paid, and made it appear that a much larger amount had been paid in than was the fact. This challan he sent to his employer for the purpose of showing the application of the money. He was charged (1) with criminal breach of trust as a servant (s. 408 of the Penal Code) in respect of the difference between the amount actually paid into the treasury and the amount shown to have been paid in by the altered challan; (2) with forgery (s. 467) in respect of the challan; and (3) with using a forged document (s. 471) in respect of the same document. The accused was convicted on all these charges. It was contended that the charge under ss. 467 and 471 were bad, as there was no evidence to support them, and even admitting the alteration of the challan such alteration did not come within the term "forgery" as used in the Penal Code, not having been made with the intention of causing any wrongful gain or wrongful loss, but with the intention of screening the offence of criminal breach of trust which had been previously committed. Held, further, that it is not necessary for the purpose of constituting the offence of forgery that the false document should be made with the intention of committing a fraud or dishonesty in the future, and that, if the intention with which a false document is made be to conceal a fraudulent act which has been previously committed, the intention cannot be other than to commit fraud, and the offence of forgery as defined in s. 463 is committed. The word "fraudulently" as used in s. 464 must not be taken as being the same as "dishonestly" and implying wrongful gain or wrongful loss, but must be taken to mean as "with intent to defraud." Empress of India v. Jivanand, I. L. R., 5 All., 221, and Queen-Empress v. Girdhari Lal, I. L. R., 8 All., 653, dissented from. Queen-Empress v. Vitthal Narain Joshi, I. L. R., 13 Bom., 515 note, and Queen-Empress v. Sabapati, I. L. R., 11 Mad., 411, followed. Held therefore that upon the facts of the case there was ample evidence to show that the accused had abetted the forgery of the challan and had used the sum, and that he had been properly convicted of all the offences charged against him, except that of the actual forgery, and that he should have been convicted of abetment of that offence. LOMIT MOHAN SARKAR v. 31. — Falsification of document with intent to deceive—Penal Code, s. 468.—Held that, where a person's object was to deceive his employer by falsifying account books which were in his custody, such deception being likely to cause damage to his employer, he was rightly convicted under s. 468 of forgery with intent to cheat, instead of under s. 465 of simple forgery. QUEEN v. 32. — Fraudulent using of document as genuine—Penal Code, s. 471.—There must be a fraudulent and dishonest using of a document as genuine before a conviction can be had under s. 471 of the Penal Code. QUEEN v. JAHAB CHX. [8 W. R., Cr., 81]

33. — Using document knowing it to be forged—Penal Code, s. 471.—To support a conviction of the offence under s. 471 of the Penal Code, there must be a using of a document by a person who knows or has reason to believe that it is forged. QUEEN v. BHOLAY PRAMANICK. 17 W. R., Cr., 32

34. — False alteration of police diary—Penal Code, s. 471.—The false alteration of a police diary by a head constable was held to fall under s. 471 of the Penal Code, as the forgery of a document made by a public servant in his official capacity. QUEEN v. BROHMO BARICK. [11 W. R., Cr., 44]

35. — Evidence of fraudulent use of document—Penal Code, s. 471—Requisites for findings for conviction.—Where the accused was charged under s. 471 of the Penal Code with having, in a suit brought against him by the karnadar of his sister to recover possession of certain property acquired by her by right of inheritance from her father, fraudulently and dishonestly used a forged document as genuine, knowing, or having reason to know, it to be a forged document, and it appeared the accused was in possession of the property, and the document in question purported to be a deed of gift from his father, Held it was not sufficient for the jury merely to decide on the evidence whether the document was a forgery, and whether the accused knew it was a forgery when he used it, but it was further necessary for the jury to decide whether the document had been used fraudulently and dishonestly. KHOORSHED KAZI v. Having made this alteration, they used the deed of sale as evidence in a suit. Held that the alteration of the deed did not amount to "forgery" within the meaning of s. 463 of the Penal Code, nor could the deed after the alteration be designated a

"forged document" as contemplated by s. 470, the intention to cause wrongful loss or wrongful gain or to defraud being wanting; nor could it be said that in using the deed the vendees were "dishonestly" or "fraudulently" using as genuine a "forged document," and therefore the use by the vendees of the deed did not constitute an offence under s. 471 of the Penal Code. Further, that their use of it did not render them liable to conviction under s. 196 of that Code. EMPEROR OF INDIA v. FATEH

37. — Public servant framing incorrect record—Act XLV of 1860 (Penal Code), ss. 218, 463, 471.—A public servant, in charge as such of certain documents, having been required to produce them, and being unable to do so, fabricated and produced similar documents, with the intention of screening himself from punishment. Held that such fabricated documents not being records or writings with the preparation of which such public servant as such was charged, he could not lawfully be convicted under s. 218 of the Penal Code, nor, such documents not being forgeries, as they were not made with the intent specified in s. 463, could he be legally convicted under s. 471. EMPEROR v. MAZHAR HUSSAIN

[I. L. R., 5 All., 553]

38. — Unnecessary use of forged document—Penal Code, ss. 109, 471—Fraudulent intention.—Where a person, in the course of an action brought against him to gain possession of a property, uses a forged document for the purpose of supporting his title, though there may be no necessity for the use of it, such a user is clearly fraudulent. A general intention to defraud, without the intention of causing wrongful gain to one person or wrongful loss to another, would, if proved, be sufficient to support a conviction; and such an intention is a necessary inference which the jury should be directed to draw, if they are satisfied that the accused has uttered a forged document as a true one, meaning it to be taken as such, and knowing it to be forged. IN THE MATTER OF DRUMUM KAZER. 39. — Intention in fabricating documents—Penal Code, s. 464—Fraudulent and dishonest fabrication.—The accused, who was a copyist in the Subdivisional Office at B, applied for a clerkship then vacant in that office. An endorsement on his application, recommending him for the post and purporting to have been made by the Subdivisional Officer of B, was found to have been falsely made by the accused. The application was accompanied by a letter, also fabricated by the accused, purporting to be from the Collector to the Subdivisional Officer at B, informing the latter officer that he, the Collector, had selected the accused for the vacant post. The Subdivisional Officer, having some suspicion as to the genuineness of this letter, wrote a demi-official letter to the Collector to ascertain whether he had really written it; and this being posted in the local post office, the accused fabricated a third document, purporting to be a letter from the Subdivisional Officer to the Postmaster asking him to stop the despatch of the demi-official letter. The accused was charged with, and convicted in the Sessions Court of, the offence of forgery, under s. 464 of the Penal Code, in respect of the three documents. Held the conviction was right with regard to the two first documents, but with regard to the third document it could not be said that he falsely made it either dishonestly or fraudulently within the meaning of that section. ABDUL HAMID v. QUEEN-EMPEROR

40. — Penal Code, s. 465, and ss. 24 and 25—"Dishonestly"—"Fraudulently."—A Treasury Accountant was convicted of offences under ss. 218 and 465 of the Penal Code under the following circumstances: A sum of Rs500, which was in the Treasury and was payable to a particular person through a Civil Court, was drawn out and paid away to other persons by means of forged cheques. After the withdrawal of the Rs500, but before such withdrawal had been discovered, the representative of the payee applied for payment. The prisoner then upon two occasions wrote reports to the effect that the Rs500 in question then stood at the payee's credit as a revenue deposit, and that it was about to be transferred to the Civil Court. Upon the first of these reports, an order was signed by the Treasury Officer for the transfer of the money to the Civil Court concerned, and to effect such transfer a cheque was prepared by the sale-mohurrir, which, as originally drawn up, related to the sum of Rs500 already mentioned. The signature of the cheque by the Treasury Officer was delayed for some time, and meanwhile the cheque was altered by the prisoner in such a manner as to make it relate to another deposit of Rs500 which had been made subsequently to the above, and to the credit of another person. The result of this was the transfer of the second payee's Rs500 to the Civil Court, as if it had been the first Rs500, and to the credit of the first payee's representative. The prisoner was convicted under s. 465 of the Penal Code in respect of the cheque, and under s. 218 in respect of the two reports above referred to. Held, with respect to the charge under s. 465, that the prisoner's immediate and more probable intention—which alone, and not his remoter and less probable intention, should be attributed to him—was not to cause wrongful loss to the second payee by delaying payment of the Rs500 due to her, though the act might have caused her loss, but to conceal the previous fraudulent withdrawal of the first payee's Rs500; that under these circumstances he could not be said to have acted "dishonestly" or "fraudulently" within the meaning of s. 24 or s. 25 of the Penal Code; and that therefore his guilt under s. 465 had not been made out, and the conviction under that section must be set aside. QUEEN-EMPEROR v. GIRDHARI LAL

41. — Penal Code ss. 24, 25, 471—Fraudulently using as genuine a forged document—"Dishonestly"—"Fraudulently."—The creditors of a police constable applied to the District Superintendent of Police that Rs2 might be deducted monthly from the debtor's pay until the debt was satisfied. Upon an order being passed directing that the deduction asked for should be made, the debtor produced a receipt purporting to be a receipt for R18, the whole amount due. It subsequently appeared that the receipt was one for R8, which the debtor had altered by adding the figure "1," so as to make it appear that the receipt was for R18. Held that the real intent in the prisoner's mind being to induce his superior officer to refrain from the illegal act of stopping a portion of his salary, the Court in a criminal case ought not to speculate as to some other intent over and above this that might have presented itself to him, that it did not necessarily follow that he contemplated setting up the altered receipt to defeat his creditor's claim, and that therefore he ought not to have been convicted of an offence under s. 471 of the Penal Code. QUEEN-EMPERESS v. HUSAIN. I. L. R., 7 All., 408

42. ————— Penal Code, s. 471—Act XLV of 1860, ss. 24, 25—Fraudulently using as genuine a forged document—"Dishonestly" and "Fraudulently."—In a trial upon a charge, under s. 471 of the Penal Code, of fraudulently or dishonestly using as genuine documents known to be forged, it was found that four forged receipts for the payment of rent used by the prisoner had been fabricated in lieu of genuine receipts which had been lost. Held that, with reference to the definitions of the terms "dishonestly" and "fraudulently" in ss. 24 and 25 of the Penal Code, the prisoner, upon the facts as found, had not committed the offence punishable under s. 471. QUEEN-EMPERESS v. 43. ————— Possession of counterfeit seals, etc.—Intention to commit forgery—Penal Code, ss. 472, 473.—Counterfeit seals and forged documents were found in the prisoner's possession, and as he could give no satisfactory information as to how he became possessed of them, it was inferred that he kept them with the intention of using them fraudulently. QUEEN v. 44. ————— Penal Code, s. 473—Intent to commit forgery.—Where several seals of different descriptions were found in the possession of the accused with intent to commit forgery, it was held that, under s. 473 of the Penal Code, there was a complete and separate offence committed in respect of every seal found, and that the prisoners could be legally convicted of a separate offence in regard to each seal, unless it appeared that several such seals in their possession were for the purpose of committing one particular forgery. QUEEN v. GOLUCK CHUNDER. 18 W. R., Cr., 16

45. ————— Attempt to commit forgery—Abetment of forgery.—To prepare, in conjunction with others, a copy of an intended false document, and to buy a stamped paper for the purpose of writing each false document, and to ask for information as to a fact to be inserted in such false document, do not constitute forgery nor an attempt to commit forgery under the Penal Code, but are facts which would support a conviction for abetment of forgery

as being acts done to facilitate the commission of the offence. REG. v. PADALA VENKATASAMI

46. ————— Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 465 and 511.—A person cannot be convicted of an attempt to commit an offence under s. 511 of the Penal Code, unless the offence would have been committed if the attempt charged had succeeded. A prisoner, who was charged with attempting to commit forgery of a valuable security, was found guilty by the jury of attempting to commit forgery. The jury explained their finding by saying that the prisoner had ordered certain receipt forms to be printed similar to those used by the Bengal Coal Company, and that one of these forms had actually been printed and the proof corrected by him; that the prisoner had had an intention of making such addition to the printed form as would make it a false document, and that he did this dishonestly and with intent to commit fraud. The Sessions Judge sentenced the prisoner to rigorous imprisonment for one year under ss. 465 and 511 of the Penal Code for attempting to commit forgery. Held that the conviction was wrong, and must be set aside. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF RIASAT ALI alias BABU MIYA alias BODIUEZUMA. 47. ————— Suspicious document used in a case—"Responsibility of pleader in conduct of case—"Guilty knowledge"—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 471—Sanction for prosecution.—Sanction was given for the prosecution of a pleader who in the conduct of a case had presented to the Court for his clients a document of suspicious appearance and which his clients were charged with having forged. The sanction was granted by the Sessions Judge on the ground that the document bore on its face such marks of concoction that the pleader's suspicions must have been aroused at the first sight of it, and that, had he examined it, as he ought to have done, he would either have rejected it or have advised his client to produce it in Court at his own risk. On appeal to the High Court, Held that the sanction should be revoked. A pleader is under no higher obligation than any other agent would be, and to justify his prosecution it should be shown that he had been a party (principal or accessory) to the concoction of the document, or that he had the knowledge that it was concocted. The mere fact that his suspicions ought to have been aroused by the sight of the document was not prima facie evidence that he knew, or had reason to believe, the document to be forged. IN RE RANCHHODAS

of the document, and the person who really had an interest under the document was convicted under s. 82 of the Registration Act (III of 1877). But evidence was wanting to show that the accused took any part in the forgery of the name of the alleged executant. Held that the accused could not be convicted of the offence of forgery under s. 467 of the Penal Code. There being nothing on the record to show that the accused was a party to or took any part in the actual forgery of the document, or that he was present on the occasion when it was forged, the proper section to convict him under would be s. 483, that is, of abetment of forgery, and not s. 443. An unregistered document, though it may not be a valuable security until the registration is completed, still "purports" to be a valuable security within the meaning of s. 467 of the Penal Code. *Queen-Empress v. 49. — Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 468 and seq.—Meaning of the term "fraud" discussed.—A police head constable's character and service roll in the custody was found to have been tampered with in this way, that a page, apparently containing remarks unfavourable to the head constable, had been taken out, and a new page with favourable remarks, purporting to have been written and signed by various superior officers of police, had been inserted in its place, the intent being to favour the chances of the promotion of the said head constable. Held that this interpolation amounted to forgery within the meaning of s. 468 of the Indian Penal Code, but that, inasmuch as it was not proved that the head constable himself prepared and inserted the false page in his character roll, he was rightly convicted of abetment only. Queen-Empress v. Shashi Bhushan, I. L. R., 15 All., 210; Queen-Empress v. Vithal Narain, I. L. R., 18 Bom., 515; and Lalit Mohan Sarkar v. Queen-Empress, I. L. R., 22 Cal., 518, referred to. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. 50. — Intention—Penal Code, s. 466.—Where a document is made for the purpose of being used to deceive a Court of Justice, it is made with the intention of being used for that purpose. A person therefore who, at the request of another sent to trap him, fabricates a document purporting to be a notice under the seal and signature of a Deputy Collector, he being informed that the notice was required by such other person for the purpose of being used in a pending suit (there being, however, in reality no such suit in existence), is guilty of forgery, it not being necessary that the intention of fraudulently using the document should exist in the mind of any other person than the person fabricating the document. *HARADHAN MAITI v. 52. — Using a forged document—Penal Code, s. 471—Fraudulent intention.—The accused passed the Public Service Examination in 1883, and in a certificate given him by the educational authorities of his having passed his age was correctly stated as 28. The accused sent a copy of this certificate to the Collector with a petition for employment in the public service; but in the copy the age of the accused had been altered to 20. Held that the accused was guilty of using a forged document within the meaning of s. 471 of the Penal Code. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. [I. L. R., 18 Bom., 515 note]

53. — Cheating—“Fraudulently”—“Dishonestly”—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 24, 25, 415, and 471.—In construing ss. 24 and 25 of the Penal Code, the primary, and not the more remote, intention of the accused must be looked at. Queen-Empress v. Girdhari Lal, I. L. R., 8 All., 658, cited. Under the rules of the Calcutta University, a private student desiring to appear at the Entrance Examination is required to forward to the Registrar, with his application for permission to appear, a certificate to the effect, inter alia, that he is of good moral character and has submitted himself to a test examination by, and furnished exercises to, the person signing the certificate, sufficient in that person's opinion to show that his qualifications give a reasonable probability of his passing the examination. Such certificate has to be signed by one or other of the persons mentioned in the rules, amongst them being the head master of a high school under public management. On such certificate being sent to the Registrar and the prescribed fee paid, that officer forwards a receipt to the candidate with his roll-number thereon, which is also an authority for him to appear at the examination and enter the examination-hall. A private student forwarded to the Registrar, with his application for permission to appear, a certificate in the prescribed form, purporting to be signed by the head master of a high school, each signature, however, being, as the applicant well knew, a forgery. The Registrar, knowing at the time that the signature of the head master was not genuine, sent to the applicant the receipt for his fee and the necessary authority allowing him to appear at the examination, and in due course the applicant appeared, took his seat in the hall at the desk allotted to him, and commenced the examination. Upon charges being preferred against the applicant of using as genuine a forged document (s. 471) and attempting to cheat (ss. 415 and 511), Held that his primary object or intention was by falsely inducing the Registrar to believe that the certificate was signed by the head master of a Government school under public management to be permitted to sit for the Entrance Examination, and that such intention could not be held to be “fraudulent” or “dishonest” within the meaning of ss. 24 and 25 of the Penal Code. Held, consequently, that the use of the forged document, though with the knowledge or belief that it was forged, was not fraudulent or dishonest, and that, as these are essential elements to offences under ss. 471 and 415 of the Penal Code, the accused had not committed either of the offences charged. Held, further, that the accused had not committed any offence under the Penal Code. *Jan Mahomed v. 54. ————— Penal Code, ss. 463, 471, and ss. 24 and 25—False certificate of attendance at law lectures—"Claim"—"Property."—The term "claim" in s. 463 of the Penal Code is not limited in its application to a claim to property. The term "property" in the same section will cover a written certificate. It is not necessary to constitute a forgery under s. 463 of the Penal Code that the property with which it is intended that the false document shall cause a person to part should be in existence at the time when the false document was made. Queen-Empress v. Haradhan, I. L. R., 19 Cal., 360, dissented from. Queen-Empress v. Appasami, I. L. R., 12 Mad., 151, and Queen-Empress v. Ganesh Khanderao, I. L. R., 18 Bom., 506, approved. One S B presented to the Principal of Queen's College, Benares, a false certificate purporting to have been granted by the Principal of Canning College, Lucknow, to the effect that he had attended a certain proportion of a certain first year course of law lectures delivered at Canning College, S B in fact never having attended such lectures. Had that certificate been a true one, it would have entitled S B to attend a further course of law lectures at any one of several associated institutions, amongst which was Queen's College, Benares, without attending or paying the fees for the first course of lectures. On presentation of the above certificate S B obtained permission to attend and attended a course of second year lectures at Queen's College, Benares, without attending or paying the fees required for the first year course. After S B had attended the above-mentioned second year course of lectures at Queen's College, Benares, he again presented the said false certificate to the Principal of Queen's College, with a view to his obtaining a consolidated certificate, which was necessary, as he alleged, to enable him to become a candidate in the Judge's Court pleadership examination in Calcutta. Held that on both occasions, when he presented the false certificate to obtain admission to the second year law class at Queen's College, Benares, and again when he endeavoured by its use to obtain the consolidated certificate in order to gain admission to the pleadership examination in Calcutta, S B was guilty of the offence provided for by s. 471 of Penal Code. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. the Superintendent of Police at Poona for employment in the police force. In support of his application he presented two certificates which he knew to be false. One of these certificates was a wholly fabricated document, whilst the other was altered by several additions made subsequently to the issue of the certificate. Held that the accused was guilty of offences under ss. 463 and 471 of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860). *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. 57. ————— Using as genuine a forged document—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 471—Attempt to commit offence.—The accused gave his pleader a copy of a document which had been falsified by an interpolation being made in it for the purpose of its being used in the trial of his suit. Held that he was guilty, not of an attempt to commit an offence under s. 471 of the Penal Code, but of the offence itself. LALA OJHA v. QUEEN-EMPRESS . . . I. L. R., 26 Cal., 863

58. ————— Penal Code, ss. 419, 420, 467, and 468—Cheating—Using false name with intent to defraud.—The accused was alleged by the prosecution to have advertised that a work on English idioms by Robert S. Wilson, M.A., was ready, stating that the price was Rs 2-4-0, and that intending purchasers might remit it by money order to Robert S. Wilson, Council House Street, Calcutta; to have then requested the postal authorities at Calcutta, by a letter signed Robert S. Wilson, to have the money orders re-directed to him as above at Rajam; to have similarly requested the Post Master at Rajam to pay the money orders to his clerk, Seshagiri Rau; to have subsequently received the value of money orders made out in favour of Robert S. Wilson from the Post Master at Rajam, signing receipt as Seshagiri Rau; Robert S. Wilson and Seshagiri Rau were alleged to be fictitious persons, and it was also alleged that the accused had no book on English idioms, ready to be despatched to purchasers. Held that the above allegations supported charges of cheating and forgery. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. 1. WHAT CONSTITUTES FRAUD, AND PROOF OF FRAUD.

1. ——— Imputations of fraud.—Disposal of allegations of fraud.—Imputations of fraud should be disposed of at the hearing, and should not be left open to be disposed of by the master on the taking of accounts. LALLUBAI VALLABHAI v. KAVANJI NANABHAI . . . 8 Bom., O. C., 209

2. ——— Proof of fraud.—Presumption.—Fraud and dishonesty are not to be presumed on conjecture, however probable. IMDAD ALI v. KOOTHY BEGUM. 6 W. R., F. C., 24; 3 Moore's I. A., 1

3. ——— It is often the case that fraud cannot be established by positive proofs, and on the other hand it is not to be presumed from circumstances of mere suspicion. It is generally shown by such circumstantial evidence as overcomes the natural presumption of honesty and fair dealing, and satisfies a reasonable mind that such presumption has been displaced. MATHURA PANDAY v. RAM RUCHA TEWARI

4. ——— Suit to set aside bonds.—Mere speculation and probability will not in law support a finding of fraud. Where a party puts forward a charge of collusion with a view to defraud, it is incumbent on him to support it by evidence to a certain reasonable extent, e.g., where a party admits that an instrument which on the face of it appears to deal with the property is written or signed by the owner of the property, he can only get rid of its effect by showing facts which would establish fraud in its inception, or show that it was not intended to be operative according to its purport. RAJ NARAIN v. BOWSERUN MULL . . . 22 W. R., 124

KUBERHOODIN v. JOGUL SHAHA 25 W. R., 123

5. ——— Allegation of fraud in pleadings—Plaint, Form and contents of.—Where fraud is charged against the defendant, the plaintiff must set forth particulars of the fraud which he alleges. CHANNIRAPA v. DANAVA

6. ———— Proof of allegation of fraud.—A plaintiff who charges another with fraud must himself prove the fraud, and he is not relieved from this obligation because the defendant has himself told an untrue story. MAHOMED GOLAR v. MAHOMED SULLIMAN. I L. R., 21 Calo., 612

7. ———— Allegation of fraud and collusion.—Where a party alleges the fraud or collusion of the opposite party as a ground of relief, general allegations of it will not be sufficient, but the instances upon which such allegations are founded must be stated, as it is unreasonable to require the opposite party to meet a general charge of that nature without giving him a hint of the facts from which it is to be inferred. JOOMNA PEEBHAD SOOKOOL v. JOYRAM LAL MANTO. 2 C. L. R., 26

8. ———— Charge of fraud—Alteration in nature of fraud charged.—It is a well-known rule that a charge of fraud must be substantially proved as laid, and that, when one kind of fraud is charged, another kind cannot, on failure of proof, be substituted for it. In a suit by the Official Assignee to recover a sum which it was alleged had been improperly and fraudulently paid away from the estate of an insolvent, the plaint as presented alleged the fraudulent concealment of the payment from the Assignee. Afterwards when all the evidence had been taken and it had been established that the assignee knew of the payment, this was amended to the statement that, if he did know of it, he had no power to consent to it, and that his consent would not be binding, the payment being a fraud upon the Court. Held that the amendment at the stage when it was made was not permissible. The High Court having decreed the claim on a finding of fraud different from either of the above, Held that on this ground alone the judgment might have been reversed. Montesquieu v. Sandys, 18 Ves. Jun., 302, followed. ABDUL HOSSEIN ZENIAL v. TURNER. (I L. R., 11 Bom., 620)
I. R., 14 I. A., 111

9. ———— General allegations of fraud—Plaint, Amendment of—Evidence of fraud—Objection taken for first time in special appeal.—Where a plaintiff seeks relief on the ground of fraud, and the plaint contains general allegations, but no specific instances of the alleged fraud, it ought to be immediately, on presentation, rejected or returned for amendment, as it does not disclose a cause of action. The plaintiff sued to recover damages caused by the defendant's fraud during his management of the plaintiff's estate from 1870 to 1884. The plaint disclosed no specific instances of the fraud imputed to the defendant. The Court of first instance, without going into evidence, rejected the plaintiff's claim on the preliminary ground that the plaintiff had no right to sue during the lifetime of his adoptive mother. In second appeal, the respondent objected that the plaint was defective. The plaintiff's pleader asked for leave to amend it by specifying certain instances of the alleged fraud. Held that the amendment could not then be allowed, and the suit must fail. When fraud is charged, the evidence must be confined to the allegations. KRISHNAJI v. WAMBAJI. (I L. R., 18 Bom., 144)

10. ———— Oral evidence.—Oral evidence of witnesses deposing in general terms is not sufficient to establish fraud on the part of a former patnidar in converting mal lands of the patni in excess of 100 bighas into rent-free lands, so as to entitle the present patnidar to resume them as invalid lakhiraj. SHIMACONDURU DENIA v. MAHOMED ALI. W. R., 1864, 137

11. ———— Suit by minor to recover share of consideration paid for lease.—Suit for the recovery of a minor's share of the consideration paid for a maurasi lease granted by the minor's co-proprietors on their own behalf and as his guardians, in order to raise money required for the expenses of the joint estate, which lease was cancelled (on the suit of the minor when he came of age), so far as his share was concerned. Held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover without proof of fraud, and that the evidence tendered by the plaintiff (namely, the record of the case instituted by the minor for the cancellation of the lease) was not admissible to prove the allegation of fraud. DOORGA CHURN BHUTTA-CHARY v. SHOSHIE BHOOSHUN MITTER. [5 W. R., N. C. C. Ref., 23]

12. ———— Fraudulent transaction—Decree obtained after compromise of appeal.—A decree of an Appellate Court obtained after a compromise and an agreement not to prosecute the appeal was held to be an adjudication obtained not only with great impropriety, but in effect by fraud. RAM-MOHUN GOSSAIN v. GOURMOHUN GOSSAIN. [4 W. R., P. C., 47; 8 Moore's I. A., 91]

13. ———— Non-payment of debt.—The mere non-payment of a debt does not necessarily prove collusion between the debtor and his vendor to defraud the creditor. Fraud must not be presumed without good and probable grounds. KISHENDRUM SURMAH v. RAMDHUN CHATTERJEE. [6 W. R., 235]

14. ———— Taking benami lease.—The mere taking a benami lease, unaccompanied by any other circumstance of suspicion, does not per se constitute fraud. MUKHOOALAL v. BHEET BHOOSHUN SINGH. 6 W. R., 263

15. ———— Purchaser obtaining assent of beneficial as well as ostensible owner to make his title good.—There is no fraud in a purchaser securing the assent both of the ostensible and beneficial owners to his purchase, so as to acquire a good title. KALSH MOHUN PAUL v. BHOLANATH CHAKRADAR. 7 W. R., 138

16. ———— Sale for arrears of rent—Benami purchase—Act VIII of 1935.—Plaintiff sued for possession on a declaration of his itmamee right to a portion of a talukh, for which his mother obtained an itmamoc pottah. Afterwards the original superior tenure having been sold for arrears of rent under Act VIII of 1835, the father of defendant No. 1 purchased those rights and interests in the name of the defendant, and then obtained from the samindar a pottah and settlement of the talukh as one coming under the provisions of Regulation VIII of 1819. He then fell into arrears, the talukh was sold under the Regulation last cited, and he purchased it benami. Held that the legal inference from these facts was that the conduct of the father of the defendant No. 1 was fraudulent. SOOBUL CHUNDR PAUL v. ATTUR ALI

[11 W. R., 33]

17. — Over-valuation of salt—Proof of fraud.—A valuation of salt, based on the loss which the owner may possibly incur on account of the bonds in respect of the salt passed by him to the Government, though greatly in excess of the real value of the salt, is not such an over-valuation as amounts to proof of fraud. HARIDAS PURSHOTAM v. GAMBLE

[12 Bom., 23]

18. — Presumption of fraud—Property left to endowment instead of for the support of the widows of the family.—The defendants having pleaded that certain Government paper, in which plaintiff claimed a share, had been appropriated, by a memorandum of agreement, to the service of an idol, and the agreement was substantiated by very strong evidence and shown to have been acted upon by all the parties for years, the Privy Council held that it could not be set aside, as a colourable transaction having no validity, merely upon the suggestion that the amount set aside was exorbitant, and that there might possibly have been an intention to defraud widows and others. BADHA MORUN MUNDUL v. JADOMOHAN DASSEN

[23 W. R., 369]

19. — Mortgagee and Mortgagee—Constructive fraud.—Mere silence on the part of a prior mortgagee on hearing that the mortgagor is mortgaging the property a second time is not such conduct as will amount to constructive fraud, and deprive him of his right to priority as against the second mortgagee. Neither does the mere fact that, being aware of the second mortgage, he attests the execution of the mortgage-deed amount to such conduct, where his knowledge of the contents of the deed is not shown. Where a prior mortgagee, however, attested the execution of the deed mortgaging the property a second time, and being aware of the contents of the deed kept silence, and thus led the second mortgagee to think that the property was not encumbered and to advance his money on the security of it, which the second mortgagee would not have done had he been aware of the existence of the prior mortgage, such silence was held to be conduct which amounted to constructive fraud on the part of the prior mortgagee, and deprived him of his right to priority. SALAMAT ALI v. BUDH SINGH

FRAUD—continued.1. WHAT CONSTITUTES FRAUD, AND PROOF OF FRAUD—concluded.

20. — Vendor and purchaser—Omission of purchaser to take possession—Sale by him to another—Effect of want of possession.—A sold certain land to B by a sale-deed dated 15th July 1871. The deed was optionally registrable, and was not registered. A continued in possession after the date of the sale. A sold the same land to the plaintiff by a deed of sale dated 1st February 1872. The deed was registered, its registration being compulsory. It was unaccompanied with possession. In 1882 B obtained possession of the land from the sons of A and sold it to the defendant by a sale-deed dated 14th October 1882. This deed was registered and accompanied with possession. In 1883 the plaintiff sued for possession of the land in dispute. Held that the defendant's vendors, by merely omitting to take possession of the land on his purchase, was not guilty of any positive fraud or of any concealment or negligence so gross as to amount to fraud that would entitle the plaintiff to relief against him. SHIVRAM v. SAYA

21. — Fiduciary relationship—Onus of proof of fraud—Accounts, Proof of falsity of.—It is only in cases where one person stands in a fiduciary relation to another that the law requires the former to exercise extreme good faith in all his dealings with the latter, and scrutinizes those dealings with more than ordinary care and caution. In the absence of any special confidence reposed by one person in another, it lies on him who alleges fraud to prove it. Where accounts are impeached on the ground of fraud, two or three instances of particular items which can be taken as false and fraudulent must be brought to the notice of the Court before it can be called upon to order the accounts to be re-opened for the first. Williamson v. 23. — Estoppel—Party pleading fraud of ancestor.—The plaintiff claiming through the heir of A is not at liberty to plead the fraud of A as against the defendant in possession, although he claims under the fraudulent conveyance.

FRAUD—continued.2. ALLEGING OR PLEADING FRAUD

To allow him to do this would be to violate a well-known principle of law which does not allow a party to set up the fraud of the ancestor through whom he claims. GHUREES HOSSEIN CHOWDREY v. USEK-MOONHUSA KHATOON . . . 1 Hay, 528

24. ———— Succession to property—Rectification of deeds made fraudulently by predecessor.—A party succeeding to the possession of the property is not entitled to ask the assistance of the Court either to rectify deeds of transfer fraudulently effected by his predecessor or to ask that these documents should be treated as void in law. GOPAL NARAIN alias JUGDEO NARAIN v. 27. ———— Sale by lady to her mooktear without consideration—Suit by transferees from mooktear.—On the 26th July 1866 M executed a kobala purporting to convey certain properties to R (her mooktear), whose representative X, by a deed dated 15th September 1867, conveyed a portion of the property to Y, who claimed to be the prior purchaser for valuable consideration without notice. By deed dated 15th September 1867, M conveyed the property to the respondents, who were in receipt of rents at the time when X and Y instituted suits to recover possession of the property and to set aside the deed, the ticcadar and M being also made defendants. Held that the conveyance by the native lady to her mooktear without consideration could not be upheld, for to uphold it would be a denial of justice and contrary to sound policy, even if the grantor as plaintiff sued the mooktear as defendant to set it aside. Still less could it be upheld in a case like this, where the parties pleading the fraud were defendants and in possession. LALLA HUBBS LAH v. KOOLDREY SINGH . . . 19 W. R., 144

a mother conveyed property to a daughter, and the property was afterwards attached in execution of a decree against the daughter,—Held that the mother could not obtain a reconveyance of the property, on the ground that the conveyance to the daughter was for the purpose of defrauding the mother's creditors, and that the onus was on the mother to prove that the decree against the daughter was a fraudulent contrivance to deprive the mother of possession of the property. KESHUB CHUNDER SEN v. VIJAYMOHUN DOSSIA . . . 7 W. R., 118

30. ———— Fraud on creditors—Right of widow to articles of property excluded from husband's schedule of insolvency—Right of Official Assignee.—A widow, as administratrix of her husband's estate, sued to recover certain articles of moveable property belonging to that estate, which had been wrongfully appropriated by her son. Defendant pleaded that, if the articles belonged to his father's estate, they had been fraudulently kept out of the father's schedule when the latter had passed through the Insolvent Court, and that the widow could not claim the property, as she would thereby be taking advantage of her husband's fraud. Held that, as the Official Assignee refused to make any claim to the property in dispute, no third party was competent to set up a claim. The creditors had their remedy against the Official Assignee. The right of ownership was still vested in the plaintiff, notwithstanding the alleged fraud. MANLY v. MANLY . . . 14 W. R., 136

31. ———— Husband and wife—Fraud on creditors.—Where a wife had colluded with her husband to buy up a decree under which he and others were judgment-debtors, and the husband subsequently sought to establish his claim to the purchase on the ground that it had really been made with his own money, and the wife pleaded that the husband's fraud had disqualified him,—Held that, as the wife was a partner in the fraud, it gave her no advantage, and that the husband's claim should be recognized, also because it exposed the fraud and afforded the only means of doing justice to the other judgment-debtors. SUREBOOLLA SIRCAR v. The defendant pleaded that the deed was a sham deed and without consideration, and had been executed by him merely to save the land from his creditors. Held that the plea was good, and that it was open to the defendant to defend his possession by showing that the real transaction between himself and the plaintiff was to defraud, whether a third party or his creditors generally. BARAJI v. The attachment was removed on the motion of C. A then brought a suit against C, under s. 293 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), to have it declared that the property was liable to attachment and sale under the decree. C contended that the decree sought to be executed was a collusive one. Held that C could not be allowed to impeach the decree between A and B. GULIBAI v. JAGANNATH GALYANKAR I. L. On the 21st August 1882, he was adjudged a bankrupt by the Supreme Court of the Straits Settlements, within whose jurisdiction he was then carrying on business as a merchant. On the 20th February 1884, he executed a conveyance of the house to C, the trustee in bankruptcy, for the benefit of his scheduled creditors, of whom the defendant was one. The defendant held a mortgage on the house for advances made by him to F. C had an agent in India, one N, with whom the defendant was a partner in business. On the 20th November 1884, the plaintiffs obtained a decree for Rs. 78,000 against F and another person, and in execution of this decree they attached the house in question as the property of F. Prior to the attachment, the defendant, in consideration of the mortgage-debt due to him, had obtained a transfer of the house from C with possession. No further consideration was paid by him at the time of the transfer.

—continued.

On the attachment being levied by the plaintiffs, the defendant claimed the house as purchaser from C, and the attachment was raised. The plaintiffs then filed this suit under s. 233 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) to establish their right to attach the house as the property of their judgment-debtor. The plaintiffs (the respondents) contended that the transfer of the house by C to the defendant was fraudulent, the defendant being a partner of C's agent, and no consideration having been paid for the transfer. The defendant (appellant) contended that it was sufficient for him to show that C's title was good, and that, if the house had validly passed to C, it could not afterwards be attached for F's debt. The plaintiffs (respondents) on the other hand argued that the defendant ought not to be allowed to set up C's title; that the transfer by C to him was fraudulent, and that he ought not to be allowed to benefit by his own fraud. Held that the defendant was entitled to set up C's title as a defence, although he might have been guilty of fraud in his subsequent dealings with C. If C's title neither originated in, nor was upheld by, any fraud of the defendant, and if the plaintiffs' claim failed on proof of C's title alone, the defendant would not benefit by his own fraud, but by the proof of a title paramount to that of both plaintiffs and defendant. In a suit brought under s. 233 of the Civil Procedure Code to establish the right to attach property, it is for the plaintiff to prove that the property in question is the property of the judgment-debtor. The onus of proof is upon him. He can have no right to attach property which is proved either never to have belonged to his judgment-debtor, or having been his, to have passed out of his possession and ownership, and become in law the property of others prior to the time at which attachment is sought. The defendant in defending such a suit may therefore rely on the title of a third person. ADAM ISUPBHAI v. JAMNADAS RANCHORDAS I. L. R., 17 Bom., 94.

B having attempted to execute his decree against the property in the hands of C, the latter instituted a suit against A and B for the purpose of having it declared that the property was not liable to satisfy the decree because the mortgage transaction was a fraudulent one and the decree had been obtained by fraud and collusion. A, who remained in possession throughout, resisted the application, and now sued B, for a declaration that he was entitled to remain on the register as owner. It was alleged and proved that the apparent sale-deed was a sham, and had been executed for no consideration with intent to defraud the plaintiff's creditors, and that the plaintiff had paid the attaching creditor to consent to the above-mentioned decree to which both he and B were parties. Held that the suit should be dismissed. YARAMATI KRISHNAYYA v. 49. ————— Suit to set aside collusive decree—Right of suit.—The plaintiff was a Hindu who, in order to prevent his undivided son from obtaining his share of the family property, made and delivered to the defendant certain promissory notes unsupported by consideration, the agreement between them being that the defendant should obtain a decree on the notes and in execution attach and bring to sale and himself purchase the lands of the family, and should hold them at the disposal of the present plaintiff. The suit and the subsequent proceedings in Court were carried on by them collusively, the present plaintiff supplying the necessary funds. The son then sued for his share of the property, and having with the aid of his father (who had meanwhile lost his confidence in the defendant) successfully impeached the sale as collusive, obtained a decree which was executed. It had been agreed that the defendant should hold the land at the disposal of the plaintiff, but he now refused to surrender to him his share. The plaintiff accordingly sued to recover his share of the property and for a declaration that the collusive decree against him and the subsequent proceedings in execution thereof were not binding on him. Held that it is not competent to a party to a collusive decree to seek to have it set aside, and that the plaintiff accordingly was not entitled to relief. VARADANAJULU NAIDU v. 53. ————— Mortgage-bond—Subsequent substitution of property as security—Purchaser, Right of.—L executed a bond in favour of S, in which he mortgaged, amongst other property, a village, called Chand Khers, as security for the payment of certain money. Subsequently he sold the same village to A, concealing the fact of the mortgage to S. On this fact coming to A's knowledge, he threatened L with a criminal prosecution, whereupon L proposed that a share in a village called Kelas, which, he alleged, was his property, should be substituted for Chand Khers as security, and this proposal was accepted by S. It subsequently appeared that the share in Kelas did not belong to L, and S thereupon sued L and A on the bond, claiming to enforce a lien on Chand Khers. A set up as a defence to the suit that S had agreed to substitute Kelas for Chand Khers in the bond, and produced S's letter as evidence of the agreement. Held that L's fraud vitiated S's agreement to substitute the security of Kelas for the security of Chand Khers in the bond, and S was entitled, notwithstanding A might have purchased the latter property in good faith, to the enforcement of the lien created thereon by the bond. SARDAR ALI KHAN v. 55. ————— Decree obtained by fraud—Judgments in rem—Judgments inter partes—Evidence Act, 1872, s. 44.—Where a decree in a suit has been obtained by means of the fraud of one party against the other, it is binding on parties and privies and on persons represented by the parties so long as it remains in force, but it may be impeached for fraud and may be set aside if the fraud is proved. In the case of judgments in rem the same rule holds good with regard to persons who are strangers to the suit. Where a decree has been obtained by the fraud and collusion of both the parties to the suit, it is binding upon the parties. It is also binding upon the privies of the parties except probably where the collusive fraud has been on a provision of the law enacted for the benefit of such privies. But persons represented by, but not claiming through, the parties to the suit may, in any subsequent proceeding, whether as plaintiff or defendant, treat the previous judgment so obtained by fraud and collusion as a mere nullity, provided the fraud and collusion be clearly established. The same rule applies with regard to strangers where the previous judgment is a judgment in rem. Quere—As to the proper construction of s. 44 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872). AMMEDHOY HUBISHOY v. There was no material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale. Held that the Court which ordered the sale had jurisdiction to refuse to confirm the sale on the ground of the fraud practised by the agent of the execution-creditor and the purchaser. Held by KUNAN, J., that the party defrauded ought not to be referred to bring a regular suit. The question ought to be decided at once on motion in the original cause. Held by MUTTUSAMI AYYAR, J., that fraud was a valid ground of relief on petition when it related to the mode in which the auction was held, and the purchaser was a party to it, but it was doubtful whether fraud was a ground of relief on petition when it was a remote cause of the sale. SUBBAJI RAU v. This was done with the object of protecting the property against the claims of the plaintiff's creditors. The plaintiff occupied the house, ostensibly as tenant to the defendant for a nominal rent. In 1880 the defendant brought a suit against the plaintiff to recover possession of the house, and obtained an ex-parte decree. He applied for execution of the decree, but allowed the execution-proceedings to drop. In 1883 he made a fresh application for execution. Thereupon the plaintiff filed the present suit for a declaration of his title to the house in question, and of his right to retain possession, alleging that the defendant was a mere benamidar; that the sale-deed and the ex-parte decree were sham and collusive transactions in fraud of the plaintiff's creditors; and that the defendant was merely a trustee for him. Held that the plaintiff was bound by the decree passed in 1880 in the defendant's favour, though it was a collusive decree. The plaintiff could not get the judgment set aside which the defendant had obtained against him by his own contrivance. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant held in trust for him, the object of that trust being to protect the plaintiff's property in fraud of his creditors. Even if such a trust enforceable by the Courts could arise out of such a turpis causa, the question was whether this continued to subsist and would be enforced, when the original relations of the parties had become merged in the decrees obtained by the defendant against the plaintiff. The general principle is that where a defendant has suffered a judgment to pass against him, the matter is then placed beyond his control. Held also, upon the general principle of res judicata, that the plaintiff was estopped from raising the question of fraud in the present suit, which he might and ought to have urged in the former litigation. Held further that the suit, if regarded as one for setting aside a decree obtained by fraud, was barred by limitation, such fraud as there was being as well known to the plaintiff in 1880 as in 1883, when the present suit was filed. A party to a collusive decree is bound by it, except possibly when some other interest is concerned that can be made good only through him. Ahmedbhoy Habibhoy v. Vullabhoy Cassumbhoy, I. L. R., 8 Bom., 703, and Venkatramanna v. Viramma, I. L. R., 10 Mad., 17, followed. Paran Singh v. Lalji Mal, I. L. R., 1 All., 403, dissented from. A decree fraudulently obtained may be challenged by a third party who stands to suffer by it either in the same or in any other Court; but, as between the parties themselves to a collusive decree, neither of them can escape its consequences. Where an illegal purpose has been effected by a transfer of property, the transferee is not to be treated as a trustee holding it for the benefit of the transferor. Where a collusive transaction has merely proceeded to the length of sham deeds passed between the parties, or even of false declarations made by them in litigation for their common benefit, the Courts may displace the apparent by the real ownership. In cases in which the transaction was still inchoate, or the grantor still retained a locus penitentis, the formal act has been relieved against by reference to the real intention of the parties. The violation or infringement of the law had not in such cases been completed, and a suspensive condition was annexed to the initial acts of which Courts of Equity could take advantage; but, apart from this, a man cannot confine the operation of his deed within the limits of an intended fraud. The purpose having been once answered, especially, by defeat of a third person's rights asserted in Court, a claim for reconveyance would be properly dismissed. *CHENVIRAPPA BIN VIREBHADRAPPA v. Suit to set aside decrees on ground of fraud and collusion.—Decrees having been passed against the present plaintiff's father and his agent, respectively, property claimed by the present plaintiff was attached. He filed two suits by his next friend to have the attachments set aside, but these suits were dismissed. He now sued to have set aside the decrees dismissing these suits, alleging that his father's agent, defendant No. 2, had colluded with the decree-holder, defendant No. 1, and given false evidence, and that the decrees had been obtained thereby. Held that the plaintiff disclosed a good cause of action. *KRISHNABHUPATI v. Fraudulent purpose carried out—Suit by legal representative of the fraudulent transferor and judgment-debtor to set aside conveyance and restrain execution of decrees.—A, with the intention of defeating and defrauding his creditors, made and delivered a promissory note to B without consideration, and collusively allowed a decree to be obtained against him on the promissory note, and conveyed to B a house in part satisfaction of the decree; and it appeared that certain of A's creditors were consequently induced to remit parts of their claims. A having died, his widow and legal representative under Hindu law now sued B to have the promissory note and the conveyance set aside, and to have the defendant restrained by injunction from executing the decree. Held (by SUBRAMANIA AYYAR, J.) (1) that the plaintiff was not entitled to relief in respect of the promissory note and the decree, although she was not personally a party to the fraud, inasmuch as she claimed through A by whose contrivance and collusion the defendant was enabled to obtain the decree; (2) that the plaintiff was not entitled to have the sale set aside, inasmuch as there had been at least a partial carrying into effect of the illegal purpose in a substantial manner. RANGAMMAL v. VENKATACHARI

In the same case on appeal held (by COLLINS, C.J., and BENSON, J.) that the plaintiff was not entitled to relief, for A, if alive, could not have claimed to have his own fraudulent acts set aside, and the plaintiff was in no better position than he would have been. Quere—Whether a widow might successfully maintain a claim for maintenance out of property alienated by her husband without consideration and fraudulently if she herself was no party to the fraud. *RANGAMMAL v. 61. ————— Money advanced on hundi—Fraudulent misrepresentation—Suit before due date of hundi—Right of suit.—The defendants obtained advances of money on hundis by making untrue representations, knowing them to be untrue, and knowing that without them they could not have got the money. Held that the plaintiffs were entitled to rescind the contract and claim immediate repayment before the due date of the hundis. There is no reason why the principle that fraud vitiates all agreements should not be applied to debts evidenced by hundis, promissory notes, or other negotiable instruments, if the facts show that the loans were contracted on the faith of fraudulent misrepresentations made by a debtor to a creditor. *BABOOLALL v. 1. ———— Person "found gaming" in common gaming-house—Act XIII of 1856, s. 57.—Held on the evidence that there was sufficient to show that the house in which the prisoners were arrested was a common gaming-house. A person is "found gaming" within the meaning of s. 57 of Act XIII of 1856 who, having been seen gaming by an inspector of police, is shortly afterwards, in a place adjoining the room in which he was seen gaming, apprehended by police constables, acting under

5. ——— Act III of 1867, ss. 4 and 13—Gambling in private house.—The gist of the offence under s. 4 of Act III of 1867 consists in the fact that the house in which the gambling takes place is "a common gaming-house." The gist of the offence under s. 13 is "the gambling in a public street or place." Gambling in a private house is not an offence under the Act. QUEEN v. KHIZBOO

6. ——— Right to enter or search house—Act III of 1867, s. 5.—To authorize an entry or search of a house under s. 5 of Act III of 1867, there must be credible information before the Magistrate or police-officer who may take action under such section that the house is a common gaming-house. Unless a house is entered or searched under the provisions of s. 5, the finding of cards, dice, etc., therein will not be prima facie evidence for the purposes mentioned in Act III of 1867. *QUEEN v. 8. ——— Evidence of house being a common gaming-house—Instruments of gaming—Cowries.—Held that the mere finding of cowries in a house searched in pursuance of a warrant issued under Act III of 1867 would not raise the presumption that the house was used as a common gaming-house; but evidence that cowries were used in that house as instruments whereby to carry on gaming would bring the house within s. 6 of the Act. *Queen-Empress v. Where a first notification which extended the Act to a town with specification of limits to which it was intended to be applied was published only once, and a subsequent notification published three times extended the Act to the town without specifying the limits to which the Act was to apply, it was held that the subsequent notifications were not sufficient, but that did not prevent the operation of the Act in places which are shown to be undoubtedly within the town according to its ordinary designation. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF BANEN MADHUB KOONDHO

11. ——— ss. 5 and 6—Right to enter and search gaming-house.—A deputy inspector of police is not authorized to enter and search an alleged gaming-house, unless he receives authority so to do from a Magistrate or a District Superintendent of Police. Where such an unauthorized entry and subsequent arrest of persons in a gaming-house takes place, there being no other evidence of an offence under s. 5 of Act II of 1867, a Magistrate has no evidence before him on which he can convict. 17. ————— Bombay Act IV of 1887, ss. 3, 4—Common gaming-house—Rain-betting—What constitutes gaming.—The accused kept a shed where large numbers of people assembled for the purpose of betting on the quantity of rain which might fall in a given time. The instruments used for measuring the quantity of rainfall were two: a rain-gauge and a gutter attached to the roof of the shed. The accused, who registered the quantity of rainfall, were entitled to a commission on each bet. They were charged, under s. 4, cl. (b) and (c), of Bombay Act IV of 1887, with keeping the shed for the purpose of a "common gaming-house." Held that Bombay Act IV of 1887 did not apply to betting. The shed in question was undoubtedly a common betting place, and the instruments used were instruments of betting, but there is no law in India which makes betting illegal. There is a distinction between betting and gaming. There must be a game before there is gaming; and to constitute a game, there must be a contest, and an active participation of certain persons is also necessary. In the present case there was no contest, no players, and no active part taken by the betters who merely watched the falling of rain. Rain-betting is therefore not a game, and the place where it was carried on not a "common gaming-house." QUEEN-EMPERESS v. NAROTTAMDAS MOTIRAM

18. ————— Bombay Acts IV of 1887 and I of 1890, s. 3—Betting on rainfall—"Common gaming-house"—"Instrument of gaming"—"Used"—Meaning of these words in s. 3 of the Act.—The accused rented a place near a public road at Bombay at Rs 250 a month. There they erected a shed containing eleven peddies or stalls. In the centre of the shed they put up, in a prominent position, a clock for keeping accurate time. The stalls were let out to certain persons, each at the rate of Rs 10 a month. The roofs of several adjoining houses surrounded this place. From one of these roofs rain fell into the place. Numbers of people resorted to this place for the purpose of rain-betting. The rain-betters staked certain sums of money on the chance whether the rain would fall or would not fall within a certain time. After making the bets, the parties betting would go to one of the stall-keepers, and get him to register the particulars of the bet in a book kept for the purpose, and each deposited with the stall-keeper the amount staked. The bets as to rain falling were determined by persons at the place seeing the rain falling in a stream from such of the roofs of the adjoining houses as had been chosen by the betters on making the bets, and seeing also the time, by the clock, if there was any doubt as to the time. After the bet was determined, the winner received from the stall-keeper the amount of the stake. Under these circumstances, the accused were charged before the Chief Presidency Magistrate with committing the offence of keeping a "common gaming-house" under s. 4, cl. (a), (b), and (c), of the Bombay Gambling Act (IV of 1887), as amended by Act I of 1890. On a reference by the Magistrate under s. 432 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882),—Held that to bring the place in question within the definition of a "common gaming-house" in s. 3 of the Bombay Gaming Act (IV of 1887) as amended by Bombay Act I of 1890, the instrument of gaming or wagering must be in the place itself, either kept there, or brought there and used there, for profit and gain. It is not sufficient that wagers are made in the place upon or by means of some article or other which is outside the place. The roofs of the houses surrounding the place in question could not therefore be regarded as "instruments of gaming, either kept or used therein," within the meaning of s. 3 of the Act. Held also that the word "used" in s. 3 of the Act, as amended by Act I of 1890, must be taken in its ordinary sense, as meaning actually used. Any article which is in fact used as a means of wagering comes within the definition of "an instrument of gaming," even though it may not have been specially devised or intended for that purpose. Held per TRIKANG, J., that neither the stalls nor the books in which the bets were registered, nor the money staked and deposited with the stall-keeper, were instruments of gaming or wagering. *QUEEN-EMPERESS v. After the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 had become law, the tenancy in respect of which the rent had become due was attached in execution of such decree. A claim was subsequently put in to the attached property by a third person, which claim was disallowed as being forbidden by s. 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885. Held that the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 were applicable to the proceedings in execution, the term "proceedings" in s. 6 of Act I of 1868 not including proceedings in execution after decree. DEB NARAIN DUTT v. GHATWALI TENURE.

1. ——— Nature of tenure—Perpetual tenure.—Ghatwali tenures are perpetual holdings subject to condition of service. LEELANUND SINGH v. MONOBUNJAN SINGH

3. ——— Ghatwals of Khurruckpore—Perpetual hereditary tenure.—The ghatwals of Khurruckpore hold a perpetual hereditary tenure at a fixed jumma payable in money and service, and cannot be evicted by the zamindar except for misconduct. MUNOBUNJAN SINGH v. LEELANUND SINGH

4. ——— Right of resumption when service not required.—In the absence of express words to the contrary, ghatwali lands held under a lease which neither confirms nor recognizes the pre-existing status of the ghatwals, nor confers on them any right other than that of holding the lands at a fixed rate as long as ghatwal service is required from them, are resumable by the zamindar when that service is no longer required. LEELANUND SINGH v. SARWAN SINGH . . . 5 W. R., 202

5. ——— Right to hold tenure on cessation of service.—When ghatwals hold land, not under a sanad conveying an hereditary indefeasible right, but on payment of a quit-rent, with enjoyment of the profits of the land in lieu of wages, such possession, however long, would not entitle them to hold the land at a fixed jumma, or to retain a portion of the land after they have ceased to perform the duties for which the land was assigned to them. LEELANUND SINGH v. NUSSEER SINGH [6 W. R., 80]

6. ——— Succession to ghatwali tenure—Female holder.—Succession to ghatwalis is regulated solely by the nature of the ghatwali tenure which descends undivided to the party who succeeds to and holds the tenure as ghatwal. A woman is not incapable of holding a ghatwali tenure. KUSTOORA KOOMAREE v. MONOHUR DEO, GOVERNMENT v. MONOHUR DEO . . . W. R., 1864, 30

7. ——— Descent of ghatwali estates—Females.—A ghatwali estate is not necessarily held by males to the exclusion of females. DOORGA PRERHAD SINGH v. DOORGA KOOREREE [20 W. R., 154]

8. ——— Services dispensed with.—Although in custom the ghatwali tenure descended from father to son, no succession was legal or valid till confirmed by the zamindar and reported by him to the Government authorities. Where Government has dispensed with the services of the ghatwals, the zamindar is under no obligation to continue to appoint, and may, on a vacancy occurring, settle the tenure as he pleases. MAHBUB HOSSAIN v. PATASU KUMARI [1 B. L. R., A. C., 120 : 10 W. R., 179]

9. ——— Power of Commissioner of Revenue—Disqualification.—A Commissioner of Revenue is not warranted by law, on the demise of a ghatwal, in considering the eligibility of rival claimants to the tenure (a perpetual and descendible one), and in rejecting the claims of the natural heir on considerations purely moral,—e.g., his having evinced a want of filial respect and dutiful feeling to his father. LALL DHAREE ROY v. BROJO LALL SINGH . . . 10 W. R., 401

10. ——— Right of succession to ghatwali tenure in Beerbhoom—Beng. Reg. XXIX of 1814, s. 2—"Descendants," Meaning of—Impartible property—Separate property—Hindu law, Mitakshara.—Ghatwali tenures in Beerbhoom are tenures to be held in perpetuity, and are descendible from generation to generation subject to certain conditions and obligations, and it would be inconsistent with the true character of these tenures to hold that the Legislature intended that they should devolve on issue of the body only, and not on heirs generally according to the law which may govern such succession. The word "descendants" therefore in s. 2 of Bengal Regulation XXIX of 1814 is not to be construed in its restricted meaning, but includes the widow of a deceased ghatwal, who may therefore be one of his heirs. Lall Dharee Roy v. Brojo Lall Singh, 10 W. R., 401, and Kustoree Koomaree v. Monohur Deo, W. R., Gap Number (1864), 39, referred to. Where a ghatwali tenure was admittedly impartible and governed by Mitakshara law, and the only heirs were the widow and the brother of the late ghatwal,—Held (it being found on the evidence that the brothers had separated, and that the ghatwali tenure was the exclusive property of the late ghatwal) that his widow was his heiress according to Mitakshara law. Although, according to the decision of the Privy Council in Chintaman Singh v. Nowlukho Koonwari, I. L. R., 1 Cal., 153 : 13 W. R., P. C., 21, impartible property is not necessarily separate property, yet semble that with reference to the peculiar character of ghatwali tenures as described in Regulation XXIX of 1814 they were intended to be the exclusive property of the ghatwal for the time being and not joint family property in the proper sense of the term. CHHATRADHARI SINGH v. SARASWATI KUMARI . . . I. L. R., 22 Cal., 150

11. ——— Suit for khas possession of ghatwali lands—Lands in decennially-settled estate.—A suit for khas possession by Government will not lie in respect of ghatwali lands admittedly included in a decennially-settled estate. GADHADHUR BANERJEE v. GOVERNMENT . . . 6 W. R., 826

12. ——— Ghatwal becoming defaulter—Beng. Reg. XXIX of 1814—Transfer of tenure.—When a ghatwal becomes a defaulter, it is in the power of the authorities, according to Regulation XXIX of 1814, to transfer his tenure, and that power is not put an end to by the money being offered before the tenure is actually made over to another person. CHITTRO NARAIN SINGH TEKAIT v. ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER OF SONTAL PERGUNNAHS [14 W. R., 203]

13. ——— Resumption and assessment—Beng. Reg. I of 1793, s. 8, cl. 4.—The ghatwali lands in the zamindari of Khurruckpore are not liable to resumption and re-assessment under cl. 4, s. 8, Regulation I of 1793, relating to thannah or police establishments. LEELANUND SINGH v. GOVERNMENT OF BENGAL

[4 W. R., P. C., 77 : 6 Moore's I. A., 101]

14. ——— Resumption of service tenure.—In 1775 a rent-free sanad was granted to M for having put down wild elephants, the consideration in future being to cultivate, and keep up a body of men, and take care of the raiyats. M died, and a fresh sanad was in 1786 granted to K and R, they being thought to be his heirs ; but in 1807, M's true heirs having established their title, the Government gave them a fresh sanad in lieu of the one to K and R, reciting the circumstances ; both these sanads were to cultivate, keep up a body of men, keep off elephants, and attend to the safety of the

15. ———— Terms implying hereditary tenure—Construction of grant.—Suit for resumption of a ghatwali tenure. Held that the sanad in this case was personal to the grantee, and that it did not confer on his descendants or representatives a hereditary transferable and permanent tenure at a fixed rate. Held also that the clearest and most precise definition, such as istemrari and murasai, with the addition of nuslan ba nuslan (from generation to generation), would be necessary to support the appeal. SONA v. LEEHANUND SINGH

16. ———— Assessment of rent—Evidence of grant—Former dismissal of suit for rent.—Long possession (presumably from the Decennial Settlement) and gradual cultivation by a ghatwal on payment of a quit-rent (and not merely possession without cultivation) are evidence of an implied grant which protects the ghatwal from enhancement or assessment on the land so cultivated. An adjudication by a competent Court made sixty years ago dismissing the landlord's claim to rent from the ghatwal is evidence of the highest order as to the right of the ghatwal in a suit brought by a landlord for a declaration of right to take rent in future. *ERSKINE v. 17. ———— Suit to assess ghatwal—Act X of 1859, ss. 8 and 15.—Where it was admitted that the ghatwal defendant's tenure dated from a time anterior to the Decennial Settlement, and before the creation of the zamindari, the defendant is protected, whether under s. 8 or under s. 15, Act X of 1859, from any fresh assessment. *ERSKINE v. 18. ———— Enhancement of rent—Hereditary tenure—Services, Cessation of—Act XI of 1859, s. 37.—The plaintiff, an auction-purchaser of a zamindari at a sale for arrears of revenue, sued in 1868 to eject the defendants from certain mouzabs included in the zamindari, and which were held by the defendants under a ghatwali tenure, on the ground that the service for which the grant was made was no longer required, and that the sanad or grant contained no words of inheritance. The defendants proved that the grant was made in the year 1743 to M, after whose death the land was in the possession of M's heir-at-law prior to the Permanent Settlement; and that he and his ancestors had enjoyed uninterrupted possession in direct succession from a period prior to the Permanent Settlement at a quit-rent of Rs 1 per annum. The Collector appeared on behalf of the Government, and stated that the ghatwali services had not been dispensed with by the Government, but might be required at any time. Held the plaintiff was not entitled to eject the defendants. Per PRACOCK, C.J.—The case falls within, and is protected by, s. 37 of Act XI of

1859. Per TREYOR and JACKSON, JJ.—S. 37 of Act XI of 1859 does not apply to the case. Quare—Is the zamindar entitled to enhance the rent of a ghatwal in lieu of services? KOOLDREY NARAIN SINGH v. MOHADRO SINGH

Held on appeal to the Privy Council.—A purchaser at an auction-sale cannot, where lands are held under an hereditary ghatwali tenure originally created before the Decennial Settlement and at a fixed rent, resume those lands on the suggestion that the ghatwali services are no longer required. The omission of words of inheritance does not show conclusively that a sanad is not hereditary: it being shown that a ghatwali tenure had descended from father to son for several generations, it was held that it was an hereditary tenure. *KOOLDREY NARAIN SINGH v. 19. ———— Grants prior to Permanent Settlement—Beng. Reg. VIII of 1793, s. 51, cl. 1—Enhancement of rent, Suit for.—Where grants of land had been made prior to the Permanent Settlement on ghatwali tenure at a fixed rent, and the Government subsequently dispensed with the services on the part of the zamindar, Held, in a suit by the zamindar to enhance the rents, that as long as the ghatwals were able and willing to perform the services, the zamindar had no right to enforce payment of an enhanced rent on the ground that the services were no longer required. The ghatwals are dependent talukhdars within the meaning of Regulation VIII of 1793, and are protected from enhancement by cl. 1 of s. 51 of that Regulation. LEEHANUND SINGH v. MURHUNJUN SINGH

20. ———— Resumption—Purchaser at auction-sale, Rights of—Beng. Reg. XLIV of 1793—Enhancement of rent—Refund of revenue.—Where, prior to the Permanent Settlement, grants of land had been made on ghatwali tenure at a fixed rent, and the Government subsequently dispensed with the performance of the ghatwali services on the part of the zamindar, Held, in a suit by the zamindar to resume the lands, that as long as the ghatwals were willing and able to perform the services, the zamindar had no right to put an end to the tenure on the ground that the services were no longer required. A purchaser at a sale for arrears of Government revenue is not entitled, under Regulation XLIV of 1793, to cancel a ghatwali tenure created subsequently to the Permanent Settlement. Quare—Whether he would be entitled to enhance the rent. Where lands granted on ghatwali tenure were, in accordance with a decision of the Special Commissioner, resumed by Government, who made a settlement with the ghatwals, under which the latter continued to pay to the Government half the sum assessed as revenue, reserving the other half to themselves, and the resumption-proceedings were subsequently reversed by the Privy Council, Held that the ghatwals were entitled to a refund of the sum paid by them to Government less the sum

which the zamindar ought to have received from them for rent during the time they had paid to Government. LEELANUND SINGH v. MCKORUNJUN SINGH. MCKORUNJUN SINGH v. LEELANUND SINGH [13 B. L. R., 124 L. R., I. A., Sup. Vol., 181

21. — Resumption—Compensation.—

In the Khurruckpore ghatwali mehals the profits of the lands, minus the quit-rent paid to the zamindar, represented the remuneration given to the ghatwals for police services. Government illegally resumed those lands, dispensing with the services of the ghatwals, and settled the tenures with the ghatwals at half the rent current in that part of the country. The resumption proceedings having been set aside, it remained to determine to whom and in what proportions Government should refund the half jumma taken by it as rent from the ghatwals during the period of settlement. Held that, inasmuch as the ghatwals rendered no service during the period of settlement, the moiety of the jumma retained by them was ample compensation for any loss they might have sustained, and the zamindar was entitled to receive the whole of the moiety taken by Government, partly as quit-rent due to him and partly as compensation for loss of the ghatwals' services during the continuance of the settlement. LEELANUND SINGH v. GOVERNMENT . . . 2 B. L. R., A. C., 114

22. — Acquisition of land—Compensation.—

Where land forming part of a ghatwali tenure in the district of Beerbhoom was taken up for public purposes. — Held that neither the zamindar nor the under-tenants of the ghatwal could claim a proportionate share in the compensation-money payable for such land. The money so obtained carries with it all the incidents of the original ghatwali tenure, and the ghatwal for the time being is entitled only to the interest accruing therefrom during his lifetime. RAM CHUNDER SINGH v. 1814—Alienation by ghatwal in Beerbhoom—Ejection by Court of Wards.—A ghatwal of Beerbhoom granted a lease to A. After A and his heirs had been in possession of the lands under the lease for sixty years, a surburakar appointed by the Court of Wards for the estate of the heir of A's lessor, then a minor, entered upon the lands, and ejected the person then in possession under the lease. Held that, notwithstanding the ghatwals of Beerbhoom (independently of the recent Statute) had not the power of alienation, still, having an estate in perpetuity so long as the services were performed and the rent paid, the lease could not be regarded as a nullity, and the surburakar was not justified in ejecting the tenant without legal process. RUNGOLALL DEO v. Ghatwali tenures in Beerbhoom are grants of land by the Government to individuals for the performance of certain police duties. These tenures are heritable, but the incomes arising from them cannot be charged or encumbered by the ghatwal in possession so as to bind his successor. GRANT v. BANGSI DEO . . . 6 B. L. GHATWALI TENURE—continued.

32. ———— Sale or attachment in execution of decrees.—Ghatwali tenures are not liable either to sale or attachment in execution of decrees. The surplus proceeds of such a tenure collected during the lifetime of the judgment-debtor are liable to be taken in execution as being personal property, but profits accumulated after the death of the judgment-debtor are not so liable. KUSTOORA KOOMAR v. DOONGA-BUTTY, I. L. R., 1864, 349

35. ———— Sale of rights and interest in ghatwali tenure.—The proprietor K of the ghatwali talukh in Bhagulpore sold one mouzah out of it to defendant L. Some time afterwards K's right was sold in execution of a decree, and purchased by plaintiff G, who obtained a sanad from the zamindar as ghatwal. Subsequently the zamindar, having compounded with Government for a money payment in lieu of ghatwali services, gave G a mukurari pottah of the ghatwali estate. G then sued L for possession of the mouzah purchased by the latter. Held that K had no power to sell the whole of the ghatwali estate to L without the consent of the zamindar; and that, when he sold a part, the interest which he conveyed could not be higher than what he himself had; accordingly when his entire rights and interests were sold, those of G ceased. Held that the zamindar, by granting a fresh ghatwali sanad, appointed the grantee to the office of ghatwal, and disallowed the sale made by K to G. LALLA GOOMAN SINGH v. GRANT, I. L. R., 11 W. R., 292

36. ———— Nature of such tenure—Sale of tenure—Misdescription in proclamation of sale—Beng. Reg. XXXIV of 1814.—In the area of a zamindari were included at the Permanent Settlement the mouzahs which made up the mehal of a jaghir, the succession to which was subject to the sanction of Government, the jaghir being bound to render public services. One-third of the revenue assessed upon the jaghir mehal was retained by the jaghirdar, forming no part of the zamindari assets on which the jumma of the latter was fixed. Per JACKSON, J.—Where a jaghir is held by a person subject either to the appointment or approval of Government, and with an additional burden of public duty to the Government, such a jaghir cannot be attached and sold in satisfaction of the debts of the jaghirdar's predecessor in title as land coming into his possession from the hands of the deceased jaghirdar, as the appointment and approval of the Government deprive the jaghir of the character of simple heritable property. Per AINSLIE, J. (dissenting)—The fact that the Government could dismiss a ghatwal and so cut off the descent does not destroy the generally hereditary character of the holding, or make such lands, when included in the Permanent Settlement, police lands resumable by Government under cl. 4, s. 8 of Regulation I of 1793. Per WHITE, J.—Where a tenure is held under services which are not private or personal to the zamindar, but are of a public nature, a proclamation issued for the sale of the tenure describing it as an ordinary rent-paying one and ignoring the important fact that the tenure is a service one is bad, and is such a misdescription of the tenure as would vitiate a sale held under such a proclamation. BUKRONATH SINGH v. NILMONI SINGH

Held on appeal to the Privy Council that, whether the jaghir was a ghatwali tenure or not within the meaning of the term as applied in Regulation XXIX of 1814 (the zamindari being Pachit, adjoining, and at one time included in, Birbhoon), the jaghir was analogous to such tenure as described in the preamble to the Regulation. Held also that the nature of the tenure had not been altered by the Permanent Settlement, after which the services due by the jaghirdar remained as before public services, and continued to be due to the Government. That the zamindar became entitled only to the rent or revenue which was previously due to the Government, and in respect of which he was assessed, and did not become entitled to the services in respect whereof the one-third of the rent or revenue was allowed as compensation to the jaghirdar. That the jaghir, though hereditary, was not subject to the ordinary rules of inheritance according to the Hindu or the Mahomedan law, but was held upon the condition of approval of the heir by the Government. Thus were precluded both division of the jaghir mehal upon the death of the holder and alienation during his life. It followed that the jaghir mehal was not liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree against the father and predecessor in estate of a jaghirdar so approved, as assets by descent in the possession of the latter. Lesleauud Singh v. Government of Bengal, 6 Moore's I. A., 101, followed. NILMONI SINGH DEO v. BUKRONATH SINGH, I. L. R., 9 Cal., 187 [I. R., 9 I. A., 104]

tenures—Mitakshara law inapplicable to ghatwali tenures—Family custom inapplicable to ghatwali tenure.—A ghatwali tenure in Khurruckpore is transferable if the zamindar assents and accepts the transfer. Such assent and acceptance may be presumed from the fact of the zamindar having made no objections to a transfer for a period of over twelve years, and when such a fact has been found, a Court ought to recognize such a transfer. In a suit brought to recover possession of a ghatwali tenure situated in Khurruckpore which had been brought to sale in execution of a decree against the previous ghatwali and purchased by the defendants, the plaintiffs sought to rely on the Mitakshara law and certain family custom for the purpose of establishing their right. The lower Court, applying such law and custom, found that the tenure was transferable, and that it was joint ancestral property, and gave the plaintiffs a decree for two-thirds of the property, and the defendants a decree for the remaining one-third, holding that to be the extent of the previous ghatwali interest which had been purchased by the defendants. Held on appeal that the decision of the lower Court was erroneous; that in dealing with a ghatwali tenure the Court must have regard to the nature of the tenure itself, and to the rules of law laid down in regard to such tenures, and not to any particular school of law or the customs of any particular family; and that a ghatwali, being created for specific purpose, has its own particular incidents, and cannot be subject to any system of law affecting only a particular class or family. ANUNDO RAI v. 89. ————— Ghatwali tenure in Bhagulpore—Ghatwal's right of alienation—Sale of ghatwal's estate in execution of decree against him.—Ghatwali tenures are rendered by their origin and incidents distinct in some particulars from other inheritances, and to them the law of the Mitakshara, to its full extent, is not entirely applicable; yielding in their case to a custom, though only to the extent of the custom proved. On a question whether the sale of a ghatwali tenure in the Kharagpore zamindari, in Bhagulpore, in execution of a decree against the ghatwal, had transferred the inheritance as against the ghatwal's son.—Held, in regard to a proved custom, that the ghatwali was not inalienable, but might be aliened by the ghatwal or sold in execution of a decree against him, if such alienation was assented to by the zamindar, this power of alienation not being limited to the life-interest of the ghatwal for the time being, but forming part of this right and title to the ghatwali. KALI PERSHAD v. 1. ————— Subsequent condition attached to gift—Void condition.—To a gift divesting the donor of all his interest in certain property, a condition cannot afterwards be attached. Where a gift completed by transfer rested on a valid consideration at the time when it was made,—Held that, even assuming that a condition could be afterwards imported into the transaction, and that condition an immoral one, this would not invalidate the gift, the general rule of law being that a gift to which such a condition is attached remains a good gift while the condition is void. A gift of villages was complete, being followed by transfer of possession. Afterwards in a petition to the Collector for "dakhil kharij" between the parties, the donor stating the gift added that it was on certain conditions,—Held that the petition must be treated as ineffective for the purpose of adding any condition. RAM SARUP v. ■ ——— Construction of gift as to quantity of estate given—Gift when operative without delivery of possession—Hindu law.—The rule as to the construction of the language in which a gift is made, independently of the "Transfer of Property Act," Act IV of 1882 (which may or may not have been expressed so as to lay down, in favour of absolute gifts, a rule more positive), is that indefinite words of gift are calculated to convey all the interest of the grantor, it being also necessary to read the whole of an instrument in order to gather the intention. A gift being thus expressed,—"I put a stop to my interest in those talukhs, and withdraw my enjoyment thereof, and I make them over to you,"—Held that this must be read with what preceded it, viz., "in order that you may perform those religious ceremonies, celebrate the festivals satisfactorily, and may provide for your own support, by having the property under your authority and control;" and that the words of gift must be taken to be limited by the purpose of the gift; the whole taken together showing that the donor's intention was that the donee should take the property for life only. Held also that, consistently with the authorities in the Hindu law, a gift, where the donor supports it, the person who disputes it claiming adversely to both donor and donee, is not invalid for the mere reason that the donor has not delivered possession; and that where a donee or vendee is, under the terms of the gift or sale, entitled to possession, there is no reason why such gift or sale, though not accompanied by possession, whether of moveable or immovable property (where the gift or sale is not of such a nature as would make the giving effect to it to be contrary to public policy), should not operate to give the donee or vendee a right to obtain possession. KALIDAS MULLICK v. 2. ——— Gift of land in consideration of performance of services—Failure to perform services—Obligation to restore land—Revocable gift.—Plaintiff's father and defendant entered into an agreement in 1850, by which the former delivered over certain lands to the latter in consideration of his promise to perform certain services. Plaintiff brought this suit for restoration of the land, alleging that defendant had failed to perform, the services. Defendant denied failure to perform, and pleaded that the contract was not revocable. Held in special appeal, reversing the decisions of the lower Courts, that the question was whether there was in this case the offer of one performance for the other, and whether the continuous performance of the services on the one side was the presupposition of the continuous existence of the gift on the other, or whether there was a mere gift with a charge upon it, the primary intent being to give; that this was a question of construction; and that in the present case, taking the agreement and counterpart together, there was clearly a covenant for the hereditary performance of the services. KACHUK SUNEAYA v. BENGAL SANTAPPAIYA . . . 7 Mad., 187

4. ——— Gift of Government promissory notes—Necessity of endorsement—Intention.—The plaintiffs, M and E, were Parsis, and were married in the year 1851. The defendant was the widow of B M, who was the father of the plaintiff E. The plaintiffs sued to recover from the defendant certain Government promissory notes which they alleged had been presented by B, to M at her marriage for her sole and separate use. They alleged that the said notes, then of the nominal value of Rs. 1,500, were endorsed in the name of the said B, and had been deposited by him for safe custody with M's grandfather J; that the said B during his life used from time to time to receive the said notes from J, and draw the interest thereon for M; that B died in 1864, and that after his death the defendant, who was his widow and executrix, used to draw the interest for M; that in 1869 she obtained possession of the said notes, and had ever since continued in possession thereof, informing the plaintiffs that she was duly keeping them and collecting the interest for M; that the plaintiffs had been living with the defendant until shortly before the present suit, and, having then separated from her, had called upon her to hand over the notes and the accumulated interest, which she refused to do. The defendant denied that her husband B had procured M with Government notes for her separate use. She alleged that the notes which had been deposited by B with J were her own separate property, and not M's; that she and her husband had dealt from time to time with them, and that no interest was ever paid to the plaintiffs, or either of them, or for their benefit. She further stated that some of the notes which had been deposited with J had been disposed of by B in his lifetime with her consent; that in 1860 she obtained the remaining notes from J and sold them, and applied the proceeds to her own benefit. At the hearing it was proved that on the occasion of the plaintiff's marriage presents were made to M both by her own family and by that of the bridegroom E. Two accounts were then opened in the books of the firm of J N & Co., of which M's grandfather J was a partner, one of which showed her acquisitions from her own family and the other her acquisitions from the family of her husband. The latter account contained an entry (under date August 1854) to the effect that the father-in-law of M had bought two Government notes for Rs. 1,500 in M's name, and had obtained the interest on them, which was duly credited to her. Other documents were produced, proved to be in the handwriting of B and J, in which the said Government notes were alluded to as the property of M and as having been purchased with her moneys. In 1864 B died without having endorsed the notes over to M or to any one in her behalf, and they remained in his name in the hands of J until 1869, when the defendant got possession of them. Held that, the notes not having been endorsed to M, there was no valid gift of them to her by B. If B intended to bestow the notes as a gift only, without any intention that his purpose should be effected otherwise than by a substitution of ownership, his purpose remained unfulfilled, and the Court could not fulfil it for him. Without endorsement, or something equivalent, a gift of Government stock cannot be completed. Where a particular form of transfer is prescribed by law, a transfer in another form is as inoperative inter vivos as in a will. Held further that, having regard to the general practice among Parsis, the conduct of B in relation to the notes showed that it was his intention that the property should be enjoyed in sole and separate use by M and her children. Among Parsis a gift may be made to the separate use of a married woman or of a woman about to be married. MERRAI v. PEROZDAI

5. ———— Transfer by gift—Failure to prove alleged inequitable advantage taken by donee over donor—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 16 and 17.—The heir to a share in an ancestral estate, out of possession and at a time when he expected that his right would be contested by another claimant, made a gift of his title to his brother's son, providing that he, the donor, should have nothing to do with the cost of getting possession. After the donee had obtained possession, the donor sued to have the gift set aside. The gift, having been maintained in the first Court, was set aside by the Appellate Court on the ground that, it having been made without consideration and imprudently as regarded the donor's interests, he had had no opportunity to obtain any advice from an independent person, but had only had that advice which came from, or was given on behalf of, the donee. Thus the gift was not an equitable transaction which the Court should enforce. The Appellate Court had, however, affirmed the finding of the first Court, that the donor, with full knowledge of the contents of the deed, had voluntarily executed it, and that he had been apprehensive of incurring costs in litigation in getting possession of his inherited share. Held that the Appellate Court was in error in taking it that the question was whether the transaction was an equitable one which that Court should enforce. The defendant was not asking the Court to enforce the deed; and the reason why the gift was without consideration was explained by the circumstances. The reasons given by the Appellate Court for reversing the decision of the first Court were insufficient. It did not appear that unsound advice was given to the donor by, or on behalf of, the donee, or that confidence was reposed by the donor so as to bring the case within s. 16 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872. There was only the donor's statement that he had confidence, which was not sufficient proof of it. Whether a gift made as this had been should be set aside, as being inequitable between the parties, would depend on the circumstances existing at the time of the gift, and not on subsequent events. *GANGA BAKSH v. GOODS SOLD AND DELIVERED.

1. Action for—Principal and agent—Delivery by, and payment to, unauthorized agent.—The defendant through a broker purchased from the plaintiffs certain goods, to be paid for by cash on delivery and before removal. Both the defendant and his broker knew that the plaintiffs had a separate cash office where payments for goods of the description purchased were usually made, and the broker knew that the delivery clerk, whose duty it was to deliver the goods, had no authority to do so without a special order from the plaintiffs. A portion of the goods was paid for at the cash office, and delivery thereof obtained from the delivery clerk in the usual way. For the remainder of the goods, the broker, on behalf, but without the knowledge, of the defendant, paid the delivery clerk and obtained delivery from him of the goods without any order for delivery having been given by the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs, a year subsequently, discovered that the delivery clerk had embezzled the money so paid to him. Held that they were entitled to recover the balance of the price of the goods from the defendant in an action for goods sold and delivered. *MACKENZIE, LYALL v. Wrongful dismissal of public servant, Suit against Government for—Contract of service—Public servant—Payment of monthly wages.—A suit for wrongful dismissal by one of its servants will lie against the Government. In a suit by a subordinate officer in the Public Works Department for wrongful dismissal against the Government, in which it was admitted that there was no time of service fixed, and in which the plaintiff put in a memorandum of agreement between himself and the Government, stipulating that he should give six months' notice of his intention to leave the service of the Government, Held that the hiring was indefinite; and that, although the plaintiff had bound himself to give six months' notice prior to leaving their service, there was no corresponding obligation on the Government to give notice before dismissing him. The Government, however, would not be allowed to exercise this power capriciously, or to the damage of the servant. An indefinite hiring in India does not mean a hiring for a year. The mere payment of wages monthly is not enough to show that a hiring is a monthly hiring. HUGHES v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL . 7 B. L. R., 688

III of 1822, s. 6, cl. 1—Reg. VII of 1822, s. 7, cl. 1—Acquiescence—Acceptance of rent after term of settlement—Presumption of due performance of official acts.*—The plaintiff sued the Secretary of State for India in Council for the declaration that a certain mouabad mehal of his in the district of Chittagong was a permanent talukh, not resumable by the Government. He based his claim on two grounds—(1) that the mehal existed from before the time of the Decennial Settlement, and the settlement of 1800 confirmed the permanent right of the talukhdar in the same; and (2) that, at any rate, a kabuliat executed in 1836 by his predecessors in title with the approval of the Collector had the same effect. In defence, it was alleged (1) that the mehal was not in existence at the time of the Decennial Settlement, and the settlement of 1800 was a temporary one; and (3) that the kabuliat was never accepted by the Government, but that, on the contrary, the Government passed distinct orders that the settlements of 1836 were for thirty years only, which order was duly published by an istahar to that effect. It was found on the evidence that the talukh was not shown to have been in existence before 1800, and the settlement proceedings of that year and the variation of rent from time to time did not support the plaintiff's contention. Held that the kabuliat of 1836 was merely an offer on the part of the talukhdar for the time being and was not binding on the Government, its terms not having been accepted either by the Government or by any duly authorized officer thereof; that both by law and by the special instructions issued for the guidance of settlement officers, no settlement could be binding on the Government unless confirmed by the Governor-General in Council. There being no proof given by either party as to whether the istahar above-mentioned was or was not duly published, Held that the publication of the istahar must be presumed, having regard to the presumption in favour of the due performance of official acts. Held also that, even assuming that the officers of the Government induced by their act and conduct a belief in the talukhdar that the kabuliat had been accepted by the Government, or that a permanent settlement had been sanctioned by the Government, that did not amount to a ratification of the kabuliat, inasmuch as such conduct of the officers was in violation of their duty as such officers and in direct contravention of the express orders of the Government. Held also that

1. —Renewal of note—Loss of negotiability by note becoming covered with endorsements—"Allonge."—In a suit by a Hindu widow as the holder and last endorsee of a Government promissory note of the 5½ per cent. loan, 1859-60, to enforce renewal of the note, it appeared that in the advertisement of the loan in the Gazette, it was stated that "the practice and rules heretofore in use in regard to the renewal, etc., of promissory notes will be adhered to in respect of the promissory notes of this loan;" that it was the practice of the Government to insist on the production of the promissory note when the interest due on it was applied for, and to endorse the payment of such interest on the back of the note; that the note of which renewal was sought had in consequence become so covered with endorsements that a slip of paper had been attached to it by the Government for the purpose of allowing further endorsements on payment of interest to be made; and that in consequence of having this paper attached, and being covered with endorsements, the note was practically nonnegotiable. The defence was that the Government had a discretion as to granting or refusing renewal, and had, on objection made by the revisioners, exercised that discretion in refusing to renew the note. The lower Court dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to show any legal right to renewal against the Government. Held on appeal that the practice of insisting on endorsement of payments of interest on the note as a preliminary to receipt of interest thereon having rendered it practically nonnegotiable, the Government were bound to renew the note. *MONMORISSE DEBI v. 2. —Theft of note—Purchaser, Rights of—Title.—In the month of October 1878, a Government promissory note for Rs. 10,000 was sent from the A treasury to the Public Debt Office for enforcement. The note was duly received at the office, and its receipt was entered in the proper book. The business of the Public Debt Office is carried on by certain officers of the B Bank. The note was stolen from the office, and endorsed over by the thief to a person who sold it to C for full value. The note bore two blank endorsements prior to that of the thief. In the same month C applied to the B Bank for a loan, which the Bank agreed to make upon the security of C's promissory note, and the deposit of Government notes. The form of application for the loan specified by their numbers the notes which were to be deposited. One of these was the stolen note. Before finally agreeing to the advance, the officers of the Bank in charge of the Loan Department sent the application, showing the numbers of the notes to the Public Debt Office, and received it back with a memorandum upon it to the effect that the notes were not stopped. On the 23rd October the loan was made, and the securities were given. Shortly afterwards the theft was discovered and the note was stopped. In November the Bank, at the request of C, sent the note to the Public Debt Office for payment of interest, and the note was detained by the Superintendent. The Bank then required C to repay the amount of his loan. This he refused to do unless all his securities were handed over to him. In a suit by the Bank against C upon his promissory note, —Held that he was not entitled to refuse payment until the stolen note was given up to him. PER GARTH, C.J.—The Public Debt Branch of the B Bank is as much a Government office as if it were carried on separately under the management of Government officers. The note was therefore stolen whilst virtually in the hands of the Government, and was, when detained by the Superintendent of the Public Debt Office, held by him as the agent of the Government on behalf of the true owner at the time when it was stolen, and the Bank had no right or power to take it in their private capacity out of the hands of the Public Debt Office. When an instrument, such as the note in question, has been stolen, the person from whom it was stolen has a good title to it, not only as against the thief, but as against any person who subsequently becomes the holder, unless such person can prove that the instrument had become negotiable at the time it was stolen, and that he had obtained it bona fide for value without notice of the theft. In this case the note was stolen whilst in the custody of the Public Debt Office before C had any title to it. The Bank, therefore, as agents for the

—concluded.

Government, on behalf of the true owner, from whom and on whose behalf they received it, had prima facie a better title than the thief or any one claiming through him, and C, in order to rebut that prima facie case, would have to show that he was a bona fide holder for value. In order to do so, he would have to prove that the note, at the time when it was stolen, was a negotiable instrument, and this he had failed to do, as he had not proved that the endorsements prior to that of the thief were genuine. BANK OF BENGALEE v. 3. — Government promissory notes bearing a forged indorsement—Title of holder—Government promissory notes surrendered for renewal—Title to renewed notes—English Bills of Exchange Act (Stat. 45 & 46 Vict., c. 61)—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881)—Holder in due course.—The plaintiff, as administrator of Purmanand Cooverji, a deceased Hindu, sued to recover from the defendants (thirty-one in all) certain shares, debentures, and Government promissory notes which he alleged belonged to the estate of the deceased, but which the first four defendants had stolen and by means of forged indorsements sold them to the other defendants and received the purchase-money. Those of the defendants who had purchased the Government promissory notes contended that as innocent purchasers for value they were entitled to retain them. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover all the shares, debentures, and Government promissory notes from the defendants. Some of the Government promissory notes on which the forged endorsements had been made had been surrendered for renewal and fresh promissory notes issued in their place. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the renewed notes from the holders. HUMRAJ PURMANAND v. RUTTONJI WALJI

1. CONSTRUCTION OF GRANTS.

1. ——— Grant of freehold—Hindu law—Words of inheritance.—By the Hindu law, no words of inheritance are necessary to pass the freehold interest in land to the heirs. ANUNDOMONEY DOSSER v. DOB D. EAST INDIA COMPANY

[4 W. R., P. O., 51

8 Moore's I. A., 43

2. ——— Omission of words of inheritance—Stipulation for retention rent-free.—A zamindar, on giving up a four-anna share which he had theretofore held, but had mortgaged, stipulated for the retention of the holding in suit rent-free for maintenance. Held the retention of the holding was intended not only for the benefit of the proprietor himself, and to insure during his life only, but also for the benefit of his heirs. Words of inheritance are neither necessary nor customary in such cases, and no inference is to be drawn from their absence. GUNGA DEEN v. LUCHMUN PRSEHAD

[1 N. W., 147; Ed. 1873, 229

3. ——— Proof of hereditary nature of grant.—The absence of words of inheritance in a deed of grant of land is not of itself conclusive to show that such grant was not intended to be in perpetuity; but the hereditary character of the tenure may be inferred from evidence of long and uninterrupted enjoyment, and of the descent of the tenure from father to son. GYAN SINGH v. PERTUM SINGH . I. N. W., Part 6, p. 78; Ed. 1873, 165

4. ——— Hereditary tenure—Transfer of tenure granted.—Reqs. XIII of 1795 and XXXVII of 1793.—Grants which are hereditary "nuslan bad nuslan butnun bad butnun" are declared transferable by gift, sale, or otherwise, under the terms of s. 15, Regulation XIII of 1795, and s. 15, Regulation XXXVII of 1793. Held that the grant in this case was not for the benefit of the family, but was confirmed to the grantee's son only. The family could have no other claim upon him than a natural obligation to help them, and their title to succeed to the grant could only accrue in regular succession. *BITHUL BHAT v. 7. — Ambiguity in document explained by reference to another document—Ambiguity in date.—In a suit to recover possession of immovable property under a grant from the Raja of P. on the ground that the grant was prior in time to the grant from the same grantor under which the defendants professed to hold, it was found that the plaintiff's grant was dated "25th Palgoon in the year 16." Held that the meaning of the words "in the year 16" might, for the purpose of showing it to be a document more than 30 years old, be shown by reference to another grant signed by the same officer, from which it appeared that the "year 37" meant the 37th year of the Raja of P., and that it corresponded with 1186 B.S. EQUITABLE COAL COMPANY v. Grants for religious and charitable purposes or for rendering military services.—A grant in inam-i-altamgha to N and his children, "and their descendants in lineal succession, for generation after generation, in perpetuity and for ever," which was unburdened with any condition as to prospective service, and free from any religious, charitable, or other trust, held to confer an alienable estate. Rule as to altamga grants—Mahomedan law.—Certain Mahomedans hypothecated to the plaintiff, to secure repayment of a debt, their interest in lands which had been enfranchised as a personal inam, a claim that the lands constituted the endowment of certain mosques having been rejected at the inam enquiry. In a suit against the executors of the mortgage and their heirs and representatives to recover the principal together with interest up to date, it was held that, under the circumstances of the case, the rule as to the equality of the shares of males and females in the subject of an altamga grant was inapplicable. BADI BIRI SAMIRAL v. ninety-two, one quarter, and ninety-six reas. The revenue of the said villages hereafter, whether more or less, to be collected by the said A B and his heirs from the 5th of June 1830, and such lawasims or haks as are at present settled on those villages are to be disbursed by the said A B in the same manner as heretofore." Held, having regard to the language of the grant and to the object with which it was made, viz., to reward the past services of the grantee, that the introduction of the words "as jaghir" was not intended to control the right of alienation inherent in the operative terms of the grant. DOSIRAI v. ISHWARDAS JAGTIVANDAS I. L. R., 9 Bom., 561

Held by the Privy Council, affirming the above decision, when a jaghir is granted in indefinite terms, it is taken to be for the life only of the jaghirdar; but when it is to the grantee "and his heirs," and there is nothing to control the ordinary meaning of the words, he takes an absolute interest. That jaghirs are to be considered life tenures only, unless otherwise expressed in the grant, is laid down in Bengal Regulation XXXVII of 1793, s. 16. 11. — Grant for an indefinite period—

Interest of grantor in property—Duration of grant—Rule of construction.—The rule of construction that a grant made to a man for an indefinite term inures only for the life of the grantee and passes no interest to his heirs does not apply in cases where the term can be definitely ascertained by reference to the interest which the grantor himself has in the property, and which the grant purports to convey. LEKHRAJ ROY v. 12. — Grant for particular purpose—

Building—Forfeiture.—A received from B the use of his ground rent-free, which he thus acknowledged in writing: "Building a house thereon, I shall enjoy so long as I and my kinsmen live therein. I shall have no right to sell the ground to another." A house was built on the site and inhabited by A and his heirs for several years, until it was destroyed by fire, when the heirs commenced to build a new house upon a portion of the ground, having leased another portion of it for building upon, and having mortgaged the whole of it. Held that the heir of B was entitled to recover possession of the ground, as the conditions of the grant had not been observed, and that the word "sell" must be construed as prohibiting alienation of any kind. BALAJI J. to his father for his sole use, and both these allegations were found against defendant, who appealed on the ground that the village which is inam was granted to defendant for his sole use in 1867 on the death of his father. Held that the grant to defendant was not a new grant, and was subject to the rights of the other members of the family. NATTAM VENKATARATNUM alias BALAKONDA VENKATA NARAYANA ROW v. 14. ——— Limited grant—Prescriptive right of inamdar to recover from shilatri the revenue formerly paid by latter to Government.—Government, by an indenture, dated 26th January 1819, conveyed to A and B and their heirs and assigns certain villages in the Island of Salsette with the exception of such spots of shilatri tenure as might be therein or on any part thereof which could only become the property of A and B on their purchasing the same from the proprietors. Since 1819 the holders of these shilatri lands had paid to the grantees and their heirs assessment (or rent) at a fixed rate which before the grant they used to pay to Government. In a suit brought by an heir of A and B in 1868 to recover an enhanced rent or assessment levied on these lands, Held that, though the language of the exception was so large that it might have been construed to exclude any right on the part of the grantees to receive rent (or revenue), yet that, as the defendant or his predecessors had, ever since 1819, paid to the plaintiff and his predecessors the revenue paid before that time to Government, that revenue passed under the indenture of 1819 to the grantees in the deed. DADABAI JAHANGIRJI v. RAMJI BIV BHAI 11 Bom., 162

15. ——— Grant of mortgaged villages—Provision for grant of others in case of redemption—Implied confirmation of father's grant by son.—In 1846 A granted a pottah of a certain village, which had been mortgaged to him, to his illegitimate son B, promising, in the event of the mortgagor redeeming the estate, to make over to B, in lieu of the village granted, other villages yielding an equal revenue, and in 1847 confirmed the grant making it rent-free. On A's death, the grant made by him was confirmed by his legitimate son, the appellant, in certain pottahs, in which, however, no reference was made to the provision in the earlier grant by the father for the substitution, in the event of the mortgagor redeeming, of villages yielding an equal revenue. After the passing of Act XIII of 1866, the mortgagor obtained a decree for redemption and ousted B. Held by the Privy Council that the appellant was bound by his father's agreement in the pottah of 1846 to make over to B villages yielding a revenue equal to that of the village which had been redeemed. BISAI BAHADOOR SINGH v. 17. ——— Grant by samindar—Mad. Reg. XXV, 1802, s. 3—Inam—Tenancy not determinable at will of grantor's successor.—Regulation XXV of 1802, s. 3, imposes restrictions on alienations only to secure the interests of the public revenue, and under it the samindar has no power to disturb grants otherwise valid made by his predecessor or titles to inams acquired by prescription. An inam, existing under a grant made in 1811, became in 1863 the subject of arrangement between the samindar, who had succeeded the grantor in the samindari, and the inamdar. This resulted in what was either a confirmation of the original grant on terms more favourable to the samindar, or a new grant of an estate in all respects, save as to the rent, similar to the previously existing estate, which was a tenancy in perpetuity. Subsequently the son and successor of the grantor of 1863 claimed to have determined the tenancy by a notice to quit. Held that it was not determinable by such notice. MAHARAJA OF VIKRAMAGRAM v. 18. ——— Grant from Government—Mad. Reg. IV of 1831—Ancient and permanent tenures.—Regulation IV of 1831, Madras Code, which must be strictly construed, applies only to suits brought to try the validity of grants emanating from, or confirmed or affected by, the direct act and order of the Governor in Council. A written order under that law is not necessary in a suit brought by a person who claims to hold under an ancient and permanent tenure in existence before the Dewany. BASTI v. ELLAIYA

19. ——— Grant in saranjam—Jaghir—Grant of revenue—Grant of soil—Pensions Act, XXIII of 1871—Evidence—Burden of proof—Impartibility—Primogeniture.—The grant in jaghir or saranjam is very rarely a grant of the soil, and the burden of proving that it is in any particular case a grant of the soil lies very heavily upon the party alleging it. It is for the Government to determine how saranjams are to be held and inherited, and in cases where the Civil Courts have jurisdiction over claims relating to saranjams, in consequence of the non-applicability of the Pensions Act, XXIII of 1871, or otherwise they would be bound to determine such claims according to the rules, general or special, laid down by the British Government. In the absence of such rules, the Courts would be guided by the law applicable to impartible property. Semble—That a saranjam is impartible, and on the death of the eldest son descends to his son in preference to his surviving brother. RAM CHANDRA MANTRI v. 20. ————— Descent of—Impartibility of—Suit for possession of—Joint management of saranjam—Manager of saranjam—Trustees of profits—Account of management.—A saranjam is ordinarily impartible, and descends entire to the eldest representative of the past holder. In 1885 plaintiff brought this suit to recover possession of certain saranjam villages from the defendant. His beneficial right to a third share of the rents and profits of the villages was admitted by the defendant. The point in dispute was the possession and management. The defendant contended (1) that the plaintiff never was entitled to the exclusive possession and management; (2) that he (the defendant) had for years been in actual possession and management, and entitled thereto by virtue of an arrangement between all the sharers in the villages; and (3) that the plaintiff's claim to such possession and management was barred. Held on the evidence that the right of management belonged to the plaintiff's branch of the family, and that there was no proof of the arrangement alleged by the defendant. But held also that the right to such possession and management was an interest in immovable property within the meaning of art. 144 of sch. II of the Limitation Act, XV of 1877; that the defendant had enjoyed that interest adversely to the plaintiff's rights, at all events since January 1866, at which date the plaintiff, who had been in correspondence with Government with reference to his claim against the defendant, was referred by Government to the Civil Courts, and that the plaintiff's claim was therefore barred by limitation. Held also that it was not open to the plaintiff to ask to be placed in possession and management of the villages jointly with the defendant. If the condition of the tenure requires sole management by one person, that condition must be held to pass with the tenure, even though the tenure has passed out of the hands of the lawful holders by adverse possession. The general rule, that persons beneficially entitled to shares in an estate are entitled to partition of it, is excluded from application to properties such as saranjams. Held further that the defendant's possession, being admittedly one for management, subject to the rights of the sharers to receive their respective shares in the profits of the villages, was the possession of a trustee of such profits. The plaintiff was therefore entitled to have an account taken of the management of the villages by the defendant, and there was no limit to the period over which the accounts should extend other than the limit stated in the plaint. NARAYAN JAGANNATH DIXSHIT v. 22. ————— Grant of zamindari lands—Hereditary mokurari tenure—Death of grantee without heirs—Escheat.—Lands belonging to a zamindari granted by the zamindar under an absolute hereditary mokurari tenure do not, on the death of the grantee without heirs, revert to the zamindar; nor does the zamindar, under such circumstances, take by escheat a tenure subordinate to and carved out of his zamindari. Where there is a failure of heirs, the Crown, by the general prerogative, will take the property by escheat, subject to any trusts or charges affecting it; and there is nothing in the nature of a mokurari tenure which should prevent the Crown from so taking it subject to the payment of the rent reserved under it. SOMER KOOR v. 24. ————— Rent due to zamindar—Maganam in hands of separate persons—Apportionment of rent—Mad. Reg. XXV of 1802, s. 9.—The rent due to a zamindar from the grantee of a maganam or division of the zamindari is not a charge upon the maganam. It is a debt due to the zamindar, and nothing more. When the zamindar instituted the suit for rent, the maganam was in the possession of third parties, who had become owners of different portions of it by purchase. The zamindar sought to make all of them jointly and severally liable for the entire amount of rent due to him. The lower Court apportioned the rent upon the several villages in the hands of the purchasers. Held that, in the absence of a subdivision under s. 9 of Regulation XXV of 1802, the apportionment might not be binding upon the Government, but it did not follow that it might not be good as between the parties to the suit, and that there was no foundation for the contention that the purchasers were jointly and severally liable for the rent fixed upon the whole maganam. ZAMINDARI OF RAMNAD v. 26. — Unsettled palayam held on service tenure—Commutation of service for quit-rent—Emfranchisement—Inam pottah issued to Hindu widow by Government—Effect of acknowledging her absolute title to estate.—The palayam of G was granted during the Mahomedan rule to a Hindu on service tenure, the condition being that the grantee should maintain a body of police for the service of the paramount power. This palayam was not brought under Permanent Settlement under the provisions of Regulation XXV of 1802. The last male holder died in 1860 leaving him surviving a widow K and a daughter C. In 1865 the Government discontinued the service and, in lieu thereof and of the reversionary interest of the Crown, imposed a quit-rent, and an inam pottah was issued to K by the Inam Commissioner by which her title to the estate was acknowledged by the Government of Madras, and the estate was confirmed to her as her absolute property subject to the quit-rent. Held that the effect of the inam pottah was not to confer on K any new estate, but merely as between the Crown and the owners of the estate to release the reversionary right of the Crown. *NARAYANA v. 27. — Grant of profits of vatan deshmukhi in perpetuity—Hereditary gomastah—How far such grant valid after the death of the grantor.—By a sanad duly executed on the 20th August 1860, the plaintiff's father, Y, who was a vatan deshmukh, appointed the defendants and their heirs hereditary vatani gomastahs, and granted, by way of remuneration for their services, Rs201 and a quantity of grain out of the annual vatan income in perpetuity. In consideration of certain sums obtained from the defendants, Y mortgaged the vatan property to the defendants, who subsequently sued Y upon the mortgage. The suit was referred to arbitration, and an award was duly made, and a decree upon the award was obtained by the defendants against Y. In 1859 execution of the decree was granted against Y. In 1864 the services connected with the vatan were discontinued by Government. In 1871 Y died. The defendants, having kept the decree alive, sought in 1881 to execute the decree against the plaintiff's eldest brother, who filed objections, but his objections were overruled, and execution was ordered to issue. The plaintiffs brought this suit in 1883 for a declaration that the defendants were no longer entitled to the allowance under the sanad, and for an injunction restraining the defendants from the execution of the decree against the vatan. The defendants contended (inter alia) that the sanad could not be cancelled, Y having granted it as full owner, and that the receipt by the defendants of the allowance had been adverse since 1864, when their services had ceased. Held, confirming the decree of the lower Courts, that the plaintiffs were entitled to the declaratory decree and to the injunction prayed for. Although the management of the vatan was vested by the sanad in the defendants and their heirs in perpetuity under the title of gomastahs, nevertheless the remuneration attached to the office by Y was in derogation of his successor's rights, and was therefore, at any rate in the absence of proof of custom, invalid against them. Held also that, having regard to the terms of the sanad, it was in the power of the original grantor or any of his successors to determine the office and the remuneration at any time after the vatan services ceased in 1864. *KRISHNAJI v. 28. — Proprietary right of khot to khoti vatani land—Right of such khot to forest land and to timber and wood growing thereon—Government, Right of, to appropriate forest preserves, assessed or unassessed land—Construction of such khoti grants.—The plaintiff sued the defendant, alleging that the village of mouzah Amboda, in the Ratnagiri District, was his khoti vatani village in which his proprietary right extended to raise crops of any kind or to preserve and cut the jungle and forest trees on the lands therein. He complained that since 1865-66 the Collector of the district had prohibited him from exercising the above alleged rights, and prayed that the obstruction might be removed and Rs600 awarded as damages. The plaintiff based his claim mainly on the settlement of 1788, Dunlop's proclamation of 1824, and several other khoti grants in the district. The defendant denied that the plaintiff had any proprietary right in the village, and contended (inter alia) that the khot derived his rights from the yearly kabuliats passed by him, that his right to cultivate did not extend to cultivating the jungle land, and that his position was no better than that of a Patel. The joint Judge who tried the suit held that under the settlement of 1788 the plaintiff as khot was entitled to the jungle produce, except timber; that in virtue of Dunlop's proclamation of 1824 the plaintiff acquired an unqualified right to the forest land in the village and timber growing on it, and that the defendant had no right to appropriate assessed or unassessed land for forest purposes, and awarded the plaintiff the sum of Rs600 as damages. On appeal by the defendant to the High Court, Held that the application of the general rules of construction of grants to a subject by the State requires that language of such general import as is ordinarily to be found in the khot's sanads should be taken most beneficially to the State. Held accordingly that, in the absence of a sanad expressly granting it, the ownership neither of the soil nor of cultivated or uncultivated lands passes by the grant of the vatandari khotship. Held also that the grant of the vatani khoti did not make the khot a perpetual tenant of Government in respect of all lands in the village, except dhara lands. Held on the authority of Tajudei v. Sub-Collector of

Kolaba, 8 Bom., A. C., 189, and Ramchandra Narasimha v. Collector of Ratnagiri, 7 Bom., A. Held also that, in the absence of evidence to show that the right to the jungle produce was intended to be reserved to Government, the plaintiff was entitled to cut down brushwood, whether as a source of revenue or for the purpose of bringing the land into cultivation. Held that the respondent was entitled to damages for the years during which he had been excluded, and to an injunction restraining the defendant from excluding him in the future. Held also that as khot the respondent had no right to cut timber in forest and uncultivated land, whether by virtue of his khotship or Dunlop's proclamation. COLLECTOR OF RATNAGIRI v. 29. ——— Right to cut trees—Khoti khaagi land in the Ratnagiri District—Dunlop's proclamation—Crown grant—Right to recover.—Defendants were khots of the village of Ojharhol in the Ratnagiri District, of which a certain plot (Survey No. 52) was their khoti khaagi land. In 1894 they cut down a large number of teak trees growing on this land. Thereupon the Secretary of State for India in Council sued to recover their value alleging that they were the property of Government. Defendants pleaded that they were the absolute owners of the trees, and relied in support of their title on a proclamation issued by Government in 1834, known as Mr. Dunlop's proclamation. This proclamation had been subsequently rescinded by Government in 1851. The material part of Mr. Dunlop's proclamation was in the following terms:—"Upon the teak and other trees that may be on any person's land, Government has no design. He whose trees may now exist, or be whose trees may hereafter grow, may make such use of them as he pleases. Government will not offer the slightest obstruction." Held that this proclamation was not a mere promise, but an actual grant or gift of the teak trees to the persons on whose lands they were then actually growing, or might thereafter grow, and that the gift could not be revoked. Held also that by reason of this proclamation Government had no right to the teak trees growing on the land in question. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. SITARAM SHIVRAM.

30. ——— Managing khot's right to create tenancies—Maphi istava lands—Suti lands—Sanad, Construction of—Freed.—In 1832 the British Government granted to the plaintiff's father, Mahomed Ibrahim Makba, the village of Ranai on khoti tenure by a sanad which provided inter alia as follows:—(1) That the whole of the land waste in the year 1830-31 was granted as inam.

(2) That exclusive of this inam land, all the rest of the village was granted on khoti tenure on certain conditions and stipulations set forth in 12 clauses, the chief of which were the following: Clause 1st provided that the khot should annually pay to Government a fixed sum of Rs 49 2 as. 36 ra. Clause 7th provided that the khot should allow the lands, which had been granted on maphi istava tenure to certain kowidars before the date of the sanad, to continue in their possession; that he should every year recover from them the Government dues and pay the same over to Government in addition to the amount stipulated with him on account of the khotship. Clause 9th provided that the holders of the suti lands in the village were the owners of those lands. Should a new survey be made and a new assessment settled, the same should be settled by Government for the holders of the suti lands agreeably thereto. From 1845 to 1871 the management of the khoti village was entrusted to the defendant as a maktadar, or lesee, under two kabuliats passed by him—one in 1845 to Mahomed Ibrahim Makba, the grantee of the khoti village, and the other in 1858 to the grantee's heirs and legal representatives. By clause 5th of the kabuliat of 1858 the defendant agreed to carry on the management of the village and render a detailed account of the balance of the village revenue every year. Clause 7th of the same kabuliat was in the following terms:—"I (the lessee) will bring under cultivation and into prosperous state the waste, culturable, and unculturable land of the aforesaid village. I will take the proceeds of the same during the years of my contract. After the expiry of the years of the contract you are to take the assessment of the fields according to the practice of the village. I have nothing to do with the same. I will not let (the village) nor lease to any body for a longer period than for the period of the contract. If I let it, I will make good the damage you may suffer." In 1869 some of the maphi istava lands were sold by the Collector for arrears of assessment, and brought in by Government. The defendant applied to the Collector to have the lands transferred to him, and the Collector transferred them to his name. Shortly afterwards the defendant acquired some more lands, which were held on suti tenure in the village. He either purchased them or took them up on the tenants abandoning them. In 1861, when the survey was introduced into the village, he got his title to these lands recognized by the Superintendent of Survey. In 1871 the defendant's management of the village ceased. But he refused to deliver up to the plaintiff either the maphi istava or the suti lands which he had acquired during his management. The plaintiff therefore sued, as khot of the village, to recover the said lands with mesne profits, alleging that the defendant had illegally and fraudulently acquired these lands on his own account while acting as plaintiff's agent and praying that he should be declared to have acquired and held them in trust for the plaintiff. The defendant contended (inter alia) that the lands in suit were not included in the khoti grant; that they belonged to Government; that he had acquired

some from the Collector and the rest from the Superintendent of Survey; that under his kabuliats he was entitled to take up the lands direct from Government, and that the plaintiff was only entitled to the assessment due on the lands which he had refused to accept. Lastly, the defendant denied that he had acted in fraud of the plaintiff's rights in acquiring the lands in dispute on his own account. Held on the construction of the maud that, the plaintiff being the khot of the whole of the village exclusive of the land granted in inam, the maphi istava lands were included in the khoti grant; that the khot's interest in them, whatever might be the extent of it, was not separable from the khoti estate; and that the khot had a reversionary interest in the maphi istava lands as well as in the suti lands which had been abandoned by their former occupants. Held also that the defendant was not precluded by the terms of his lease from acquiring the lands in dispute on his own account. The engagement to furnish accounts of the balance of the village revenue at the end of each year was simply an engagement to furnish the plaintiff with information which would be of use to him, and which indeed it would be necessary for him to possess when he resumed the management of the village on the determination of the lease. It imported nothing more than that; and the whole transaction evidenced by the kabuliats was merely an assignment in consideration of a fixed annual payment to be made by defendant to plaintiff, of the rights and liabilities of the latter to be exercised and discharged for a certain period by the former. For that period the defendant was the maktadar or tenant of the plaintiff's khotship; and though a certain confidence was necessarily reposed in him in connection with a tenancy of this nature, and though he was bound jealously and scrupulously to protect the plaintiff's interests, so far as they were in his keeping, yet he was not bound by the strict rule which prohibits a trustee from acquiring for himself an estate of his cestui que trust. Under clause 7th of the kabuliats of 1858, the defendant was at liberty either to take up waste lands himself or put in tenants; if he put in tenants on leases, the special advantages of any leases were to expire with his own lease. But the actual occupation of land either by himself or by his tenants was not to be interfered with at the determination of his lease, so long as he or they continued to pay the assessment according to the practice of the village. The defendant could therefore, without the intervention of the Collector, have taken up the maphi istava lands in suit and become himself the tenant; and he could have also acquired the suti lands from former sutidars, or taken them up if waste, without the intervention of the Survey Superintendent. The circumstance that when acquiring the lands he needlessly invoked the assistance of the revenue authorities would not invalidate his title if it could not be impugned on other grounds. Held further that the defendant was not guilty of fraud, as there was no evidence to show that he had acted in a surreptitious or secret manner in acquiring the lands in suit. On the contrary, his action in applying to the revenue authorities was a sign of his good faith rather than of any fraudulent intent. The plaintiff was therefore not entitled to oust the defendant from the lands in suit. FAXI ISMAIL v. MAHOMED ISMAIL. . I. L. R., 12 Bom., 595

31. ——— Invalidity of grant, or covenant by grantor, in favour of person unborn upon a condition which may never arise—

Restraint upon grantor's own power of alienating—Hindu law.—The purpose of a grant was to oblige the grantor and his successors in a raj estate to give in some way or other maintenance to all the descendants of four persons living at the date of the grant, by declaring that, on the failure of the raja of the day at any future time to maintain such descendants, the latter were to have an immediate right to four of the raj villages. This might be regarded as imparting a present assignment to persons not yet in existence, subject to a suspensive condition, which might prevent its ever taking effect; or it might be regarded as a covenant intended to run with the raj estate, in favour of non-existing covenantees, to give the villages to them in the event specified. Held that in either view it was equally ineffectual. Held also that the High Court had correctly construed the instrument in holding that the words "If ever in the time of my descendants you are not provided with means of maintenance" formed a condition which also was unfulfilled—the descendants being in possession of villages granted to them by the raja, other than those claimed, more than sufficient for their maintenance. CHANDI CHURN BARUA v. 32. ——— Revenue-free grant—Settlement in favour of daughter purporting to render other lands than the lands settled liable in the hands of the settlor and his heirs for the revenue of the settled lands—Beng. Reg. XXXI of 1803, s. 6—Mahomedan law of inheritance.—One B in 1843 settled certain lands on his daughter R, and covenanted that he and his heirs would pay the land revenue due on the estate so assigned along with the land revenue for their own estate. The deed of settlement then went on to provide that, if at any time the heirs of the settlor, or whoever might be in possession of the rest of his estate, should demand from R, or the person in possession of the lands assigned to her, the revenue assessed on those lands, then R and her heirs would be entitled to claim and take possession of the legal share in the settlor's estate to which she would be entitled under the Mahomedan law of inheritance. Held that, as regards a person who had acquired a portion of the settled property partly by private sale and partly by sale at auction, the settlement contravened the provisions of s. 6 of Regulation No. XXXI of 1803, and the heirs of the settlor could not be compelled to pay the land revenue due on the portion of the settled lands acquired by the said purchaser, nor had the purchaser any right under the deed of settlement to a proportionate part of the inheritance which would have come to Rahmat-un-nissa from her father. SABIS ALI v. GRANT—continued.1. CONSTRUCTION OF GRANTS—continued.

83. ———— Grant of portion of impartible samindari—Absolute grant—Creation of separate estate in favour of grantee as between him and grantor—Restriction in instrument contravening Hindu law of inheritance.—In a suit for the recovery of possession of an estate, it appeared that the estate in question had formerly formed a portion of an impartible samindari, but had been granted, in the year 1845, by the plaintiff's father to his younger brother, in whose name the estate was registered in the Collector's books as a separate estate. The instrument of grant provided (inter alia) that in case of failure of self-begotten male issue in the grantee's line, the immovable property of the grantee should be put in possession of the grantor's line. On the death of the first grantee, the property passed into the possession of his two sons, and, on the death of the elder son, it came into the possession of the younger son. On his death without male issue, the estate passed into the possession of his widow, defendant in the present suit. The plaintiff contended that the grant made to respondent's father-in-law was a maintenance grant; that under its terms the estate reverted to his father (now deceased) on the death of respondent's husband, when there was a failure of male heirs in his branch; and that, notwithstanding the grant, the members of the two branches did not fail to be co-parceners, and that consequently the right of survivorship of the plaintiff attached to the exclusion of the defendant. Held that, on the construction of the instrument of grant, the estate became, by virtue of that instrument, the separate and absolute property of respondent's branch of the family, and that the provision in that instrument purporting to create a special right of reversion in case of failure of female issue contravened the principle laid down in the case of Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B. L. R., 877; L. R., I. A., Sup. Vol., 47, and was inoperative. VENKATA KUMARA MAHIPATI SURYA RAU v. CHELLAYAMMI GARI

84. ———— Grant of land—Presumption as to boundaries where grant is described as bounded by a river or a road—Meaning of "river."—If land adjoining a high way or river is granted, the half of the road or the half of the river is presumed to pass, unless there is something either in the language of the deed or in the nature of the subject-matter of the grant, or in the surrounding circumstances, sufficient to rebut that presumption; and this though the measurement of the property which is granted can be satisfied without including half the road or half the bed of the river, and although the land is described as bounded by a river or a road, and notwithstanding that the map which is referred to in the grant does not include the half of the river or the road. And this rule of construction cannot be departed from, merely because it is shown that it would have been to the interest of the grant or to retain half the bed of the river. This rule of construction applies equally whether the subject-matter be a grant from the Crown or a subject. Micklethwaite v. Newlay Bridge Co., L. R., 33 Ch.

Therefore a rent-free grant made by a zamindar, and a fortiori one by a mourasi ijaradar, of a specific portion of land after a Permanent Settlement of the estate to which it belongs, is valid as against the grantor and his heirs or against a purchaser of the estate by private sale, and is not liable to be resumed under that section. *Held per BAYLEY, NORMAN, and SETON-KARR, JJ., contra. 44. — Hereditary grant, Presumption of—Allowance—Long enjoyment—Title—Bom. Reg. V of 1827, s. 1.—Where the plaintiff's ancestors had enjoyed an allowance during four successive generations for a period extending over more than a century, the legal presumption, in the absence of the original grant, is that such grant was hereditary. The allowance having been continued by the British Government to the plaintiff's grandfather, for the same reason for which a village (admitted to be held on hereditary tenure) had been continued, and having been paid to the plaintiff's grandfather up to his decease, and afterwards, as a matter of course, to the plaintiff's father, it was held that the enjoyment of the plaintiff's grandfather and father was proprietary enjoyment; and as this enjoyment had continued uninterruptedly for more than thirty years, that, under Regulation V of 1827, s. 1, a statutory and indefeasible title to the allowance had been acquired. DESAI KALYANRAYA HUKAMATRAYA v. —Allowance for temple—Bom. Reg. V of 1827, s. 1.—Where a charitable grant in connection with a temple was proved to have been enjoyed by the incumbent and those under whom he held in regular succession for more than thirty years, it was held that the grantee had acquired a right of property in it under Regulation V of 1827, s. 1. By WARDEN, J.—Independently of the origin or nature of the grant. By GIBBS, J.—In the absence of it being shown to have been a personal grant, and by the conduct of Government in paying to the several generations in succession. COLLECTOR OF KHEDA v. 47. ——— Invalidity of grant, or covenant by grantor, in favour of persons unborn, upon a condition which may never arise—Restraint upon grantor's own power of alienating—Hindu law.—A Hindu owner cannot make a conditional grant of a future interest in property in favour of persons unborn, who may happen at a future time to be the living descendants of the grantees named, to take effect upon the occurrence of an event which may never occur. That he would thereby impose a restraint contrary to the principles of Hindu law, upon his own power of alienating his estate, discharged of such future interest, is a reason for the invalidity of such a grant. The purpose was to oblige the grantor and his successors in a Raj estate to give in some way or other maintenance to all the descendants of four persons living at the date of the grant, by declaring that, on the failure of the Raja of the day at any future time to maintain such descendants, the latter were to have an immediate right to four of the Raj villages. This might be regarded as importing a present assignment to persons not yet in existence, subject to a suspensive condition, which might prevent its ever taking effect; or it might be regarded as a covenant intended to run with the Raj estate, in favour of non-existing covenantees, to give the villages to them in the event specified. Held that in either view it was equally ineffectual. CHANDI CHURN BARUA v. 3. GRANTS FOR MAINTENANCE.

48. ——— Nature of tenure—Resumption and assessment of lands.—In a suit for assessment of rent on certain villages the defendant admitted that the villages formerly belonged to the plaintiff's predecessor, but were given over to them for their maintenance. Held that under these circumstances the defendant's tenancy was a mere tenancy-at-will, which the plaintiff's predecessor had a right to determine at any time. GOVERNMENT v. maintenance—Possession of successors of grantees.—Land held as a maintenance grant is resumable by the zamindar at the death of the grantees, whether it is in the hands of more immediate, or in those of more remote, members of the family; the nature of such a grant being to make suitable provision for the immediate members, while it prevents the zamindari from being completely swallowed up by contentious demands. 52. ——— Value of land enhanced by irrigation.—Where a zamindar granted to his mother, in lieu of maintenance, two villages, the income of which, upon the introduction of irrigation, was greatly enhanced without any expenditure or labour on the part of the grantee, Held, in a suit by the grantee for damages against parties claiming to have been put in possession of the lands of the two villages by the successor of the grantor—(1) that in the absence of express words to the contrary, the grant endured for the grantee's life; (2) that as the provision was reasonable, the grant was binding on the successor of the grantor; (3) that the introduction of irrigation, not having been contemplated at the time of the grant, might entitle the present zamindar to revise and re-adjust the terms of the grant, but was no ground for dispossessing the grantee. BHAVANAMMA v. widow of the youngest brother, on the deaths of his son and daughter, became by survivorship sole owner of the estate so assigned for their and her benefit; so that an alienation of part, if made by her, could not be set aside at the instance of the second brother, who failed to show, on the above state of things, that the estate was heritable property of the son, as whose uncle and heir he claimed. NARPAT SINGH v. 57. ——— Grant by holder of appanage—Lease for mining purposes.—Though the holder of a younger brother's appanage has no power of complete and absolute alienation of property, of which he has only a limited tenure for maintenance, still a lease granted by him is good as between him and the grantee and those claiming under the grantor, at least during the grantor's life. II, art. 91—Suit for declaratory decree—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 39—Adverse possession.—A grant of a village for maintenance was made by a zamindar to his nephew, operating only for life. The grantee survived the grantor, and by ikrarnama acknowledged the succeeding zamindar to be entitled to the village. The grantee had, however, already executed a pottah, described therein as permanent, to a lessee. The latter obtained possession, and from him after the death of the original grantee for life the zamindars who succeeded the grantor accepted rent at the rate stipulated in the pottah, and did not disturb his possession. This suit, after the death of the lessee, claimed the village as part of the inherited zamindari, the defence being that the lessee was perpetual. Held (1) that the original grant not having extended to more than the life of the grantee, the pottah was void as against the successor in title of the grantor, and not merely voidable after the grantee's death. The acceptance of rent at the rate in the pottah could not have the effect of confirming it in its entirety, which, according to the construction of the High Court, would have been for a permanent estate. The duration of the pottah could not exceed that of the original grant; nor could an admission, taken by the High Court to have been that the acceptance of rent had confirmed the permanency of the lease, preclude the claim for legal rights, even supposing that admission to have been made. The matter in contest was as to the circumstances under which the lessee was allowed to remain in possession and their legal effect. And on the evidence, the lessee had been allowed to remain as a mokurari tenant for his life. (2) The suit for possession was not barred under article 91 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) on the ground that a decree declaratory of title to have the pottah cancelled might have been sued for in the lessee's lifetime under s. 39 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877. (3) The possession of a tenant for life is not rendered adverse within the meaning of Act XV of 1877 by a notice from the tenant that he claims to be holding on a perpetual or hereditary tenure. BENI PERSHAD KOENI v. 68. — Grant by Hindu sovereign to Hindu temple—Nibandha—Antastha sadilvar—Kherij jumwabundi parbhare palki—Religious penalty for resumption.—The peishwa, by a sanad dated 1790, granted to an ancestor of the plaintiffs, for the support of a Hindu temple, an annual cash allowance of Rs50 out of the "Antastha sadilvar" and three khandis of rice out of the "kherij jumwabundi parbhare," to be levied from certain mehals and forts mentioned in the sanad. The allowances were paid till the death of the plaintiffs' father on the 26th December 1859, when the Collector of Thana stopped them. On the 23rd December 1870, the plaintiffs sued to establish their right to the grant and to recover six years' arrears of the allowances. Held that the grant was irrevocable, inalienable, and perpetual. It was not a grant from the revenues of the State at large or even of the sillah, but was made up of certain small special grants charged upon the antastha sadilvar, produced by certain special localities in the sillah. Thus the grant was essentially localized, and whatever there might have been of contingency or variability in the levy or application of the antastha sadilvar previously to the making of the grant, such contingency or variability ceased to the extent of the grant from the moment of its being made to a Hindu temple. The religious penalty for the resumption of a royal grant made for Hindu religious purposes is sometimes expressed in the grant and sometimes omitted from it. But its omission does not in any wise derogate from the durability of the grant. The Hindu law implies the religious penalty for resumption, albeit not expressed in the sanad. Secondary evidence of lost grant by Government.—In a suit to declare the plaintiff's title to a shrotrium village which was included in the jaghir granted in 1763 by the Nawab of the Carnatic to the East India Company, it appeared that the village in question had been previously granted by the Nawab free of assessment to the Kazi of Madras as an endowment for his office, and afterwards to the son of the first grantee personally, without condition of service. In 1779 the British Government confirmed the village in perpetuity to the second grantee on account of the office of Kazi which he filled, and to his direct heirs who should be fit for that office. In 1862 on failure of the direct male line, the grantee's grandson by a daughter was nominated to the office of Kazi with the approval of Government, who directed he should hold the village, adding that it had been assigned as an endowment for that office. In the same years the Inam Commissioner confirmed it as a personal inam, enfranchised it and granted a title-deed to the holder. In 1866 Government ordered that the village should be registered as an endowment of the Kazi-ship and the title-deed cancelled, and in 1868 notified in the Gazette that the title-deed which was not produced was cancelled. Between the dates of the above order and notification the Kazi transferred the village to the plaintiff under a deed of perpetual lease and placed him in possession. But in 1873 Government resumed the village and subsequently directed that the whole of its net revenue be paid to the Kazi. The Kazi from whom the plaintiff claimed died in 1868. An inam of certain menkaval lands, which had formerly been allotted to the village watchman as inam, had been granted to the Kazi in 1802-3; they were cultivated by raiyats who paid varan to the inamdar. The order of resumption in 1873 had no reference to these lands, but in 1877 Government issued pottahs to the raiyats. Held (1) that the grant of 1779, the original document not having been produced by the plaintiff, was sufficiently proved by a translation produced from official custody and certified by the Collector in 1838 to be correct and attested by the Persian translator to Government; (2) that it was competent for the Government in 1779 to alter the nature of the grant of 1761 as an act of State; (3) that on the right construction of Regulation IV of 1831 and Act IV of 1862, and in view of the facts that the plaintiff must have been aware of the nature of the tenure and of the contents of the grant of 1779 and the cancellation of the inam title-deed, the Government were not acting ultra vires in cancelling the enfranchisement, etc.; (4) that the Kazi through whom the plaintiff claimed having died in 1863, there was no reason to question the resumption in 1873; (5) that the plaintiff was entitled to possession of the menkaval lands, the action of Government in issuing pottahs to the raiyats being ultra vires. Issues first framed on appeal as to the plaintiff's claim to mirasi rights and menkaval lands. Evidence of mirasi rights considered. KARUNAKARA MENON v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA [I. L. 2. — Appropriation of payments

—Guarantee on advance to limited company.—In consideration that the plaintiffs would advance a certain sum to a limited company, two of the directors agreed that the plaintiffs should repay themselves the amount "from the first moneys received by them on account of the said company," and each of them agreed to hold himself personally responsible for the payment of half the amount of any deficiency of the amount realised by the plaintiffs in the manner above described. At this time the plaintiffs were the bankers of the company, and were regularly paying and receiving money for them. The plaintiffs, instead of applying the first moneys coming to their hands in liquidation of the amount advanced under the guarantee, applied such moneys towards the payment of other debts due to themselves from the company. In an action against the executrix of one of the directors, Held, upholding the decision of the Court below, that the plaintiffs, as between themselves and the guarantors, were bound to appropriate the first receipts to the payment of the guaranteed debt, and that, as they had not done this, the guarantee was discharged. *NICHOLLAS v. 3. — Custom—Trade custom in Beawar

—Payments made by arathdars—Ratification.—By a custom of Beawar, a merchant coming there from another district is allowed to trade only in the name and in the credit of some local arath or banking firm which guarantees his dealings, and to which, on the conclusion of transactions, a panri, or memorandum thereof, is sent by the stranger merchant. C coming to Beawar made several purchases in accordance with the above custom, using the firm of S & M as his arath. On leaving Beawar, he sent S & M a panri, in which all his purchases, except the last and largest, under which he had taken no delivery and had made no payment, were entered. On application by the vendors in the last transaction to S & M as guarantors of C to make good the purchase-money, they at first refused on the ground that the transaction was not entered in the panri sent them, but afterwards they consented to pay the vendors the amount of the loss occasioned by C's failure to pay and take delivery. In a suit by S & M against C to recover the amount so paid, Held that, if the plaintiffs were cognizant of and allowed their names to be used in the last transaction, as was shown to have been the case in previous transactions, they were, according to the custom, liable to the vendors, and consequently entitled to recover over from the defendant what they had paid; and that, even if there was no actual authority given at the time of the transaction, still as the defendant had used the names of the plaintiffs as his guarantors, and had held them out as liable to pay on his behalf for the goods he purchased, they were thereby authorised, if they thought fit, to make the subsequent payment which they did on behalf of the defendant, or (in other

We also agree to see the voyage performed by the said vessel in full terms and conditions of the said charter party this day executed by C in your favour." To this the plaintiffs replied on the same day: "In consideration of your having guaranteed to keep us harmless for the advance made by us to C, owner of the ship Caroline, against freight of that vessel, to be earned by her on the anticipated voyage from Rangoon to Bombay, with a cargo of timber, as per charter party executed this day between ourselves and the said C as per your letter of guarantee dated this day, we hereby agree and engage ourselves to make you over a mortgage-bond on the British barque Moulmein of 805 tons, executed in Moulmein by the said C in favour of N B of Rangoon, for certain debts due to him by the said C, duly transferred to you free from N B's claim on the said barque Moulmein." The charter party was of even date, and was made by C on the one part and the plaintiffs on the other part, and it was thereby agreed that the ship Caroline, "being tight, strong, and staunch, and in every way fitted for the voyage, and now at Bombay, shall with all convenient despatch proceed to the port of Rangoon in British Burma or so near thereto as she may safely get, and there load from the charterer's agents or their order a full and complete cargo of timber," etc., "and being so loaded shall proceed to Bombay," etc., "and deliver the same on being paid freight in the manner below at and after the rate," etc., "the act of God, etc., excepted." The freight to be paid as follows:—"Rs18,000 in Calcutta on the signing of this charter party, Rs3,500 also in advance at Bombay towards defraying the disbursements of the vessel at that port, and the balance to be paid by transfer on account and to credit of N B of Rangoon, for money due and owing to him by the said C," etc. "And the said C hereby binds himself," etc., "that the said vessel Caroline shall be ready to leave Bombay without any delay immediately upon the disbursements being satisfied; and in case she cannot leave the said port of Bombay within such time as shall be considered reasonable, or is otherwise detained either at Bombay aforesaid or at Rangoon, except for or by such causes as the act of God," etc., "then and in such case this charter party shall be considered null and void, and the said charterers shall be entitled to recover from the said C, his heirs and representatives, the aforesaid sum of Rs21,500, together with interest thereon, calculated from the date hereof, at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum. The charterers to have the option of cancelling their charter party in the event of the vessel arriving at Rangoon in a disabled state, and the time for repairs to make the ship seaworthy in every respect exceeding twenty-five days. Penalty for non-performance of this agreement, the estimated amount of freight." The plaintiffs were acting on behalf of N B, and the defendants on behalf of C during the whole of this negotiation, and C was at the time largely indebted to N B. The ship Caroline turned out to be unseaworthy, and the charter party was not carried out. In an action by the plaintiffs against the defendants on the guarantee, Held that the covenant to transfer the mortgage of the Moul-meeis was independent, and not a condition precedent to the plaintiff's right of action. Held also on the facts that the representation in the charter party that the Caroline was, while lying at Bombay, "tight, strong, and staunch," etc., amounted to a contract that the ship should be so, and the defendants' guarantee covered it. Held also that the defendants, not being parties to the charter party and not having bound themselves to any assessment of damages, were not called on to pay the penalty specified in the last clause of the charter-party, but that the damages against them must be the actual damages which the plaintiffs on N B's behalf suffered in consequence of C's breach of contract,—that is, Rs21,500 paid under the contract, and the balance of freight that would have gone to reduce N B's debt and interest on both sums from the date of the contract. The plaintiffs, however, claimed a less sum than these damages would amount to, and therefore the plaintiff's claim was decreed in full. PRIS-TOMJEE DRUMJESHOY v. GREGORY

5. ——— Surety—Disclosure—Material fact—Contract Act, s. 142.—M was declared the highest bidder at a sale of an abkari farm for three years, and his bid was accepted, subject to his furnishing the security required by the conditions of sale. Having failed to furnish security, the farm was re-sold at a loss of Rs4,876, and M became indebted to Government in that amount. On the re-sale, M was again declared purchaser, and being unable to furnish the necessary security, N was accepted as his surety for the due fulfilment of the conditions of the lease to be performed by M. N did not enquire and was not informed by the Collector as to the debt due by M when he executed the surety-bond. Held, in a suit to enforce this bond (which was executed before the Contract Act, 1872, came into force) against N, that N

6. ——— Intention of parties—Bona fide endeavour to perform engagement—Penalty.—When a third person voluntarily consents to incur liability on account of another, and binds himself in a penalty for the due performance of his engagement, the nice technicalities of English law are not applicable, but the real intention of the parties must be looked to. In this case, there having been a bona fide endeavour on the part of the respondent fairly to perform his engagement, and there having been a disposition on the part of the appellant to throw obstacles in the way of the performance, in order to obtain payment of the penalty consequent on non-performance, the appeal was dismissed. RAM GOPAL MOOKERJEE v. 10. ——— Construction of contract guaranteeing conduct of person employed as agent of the guarantor—Liability for loss resulting from such agent's misconduct towards his employer.—Upon the construction of an agreement guaranteeing an employer against loss by the misconduct of a person employed as agent of the guarantor, Held that the loss, to be recoverable in a suit against the guarantor, must be shown to have arisen from misconduct on the part of the agent in connection with the business of the agency, and to be within the scope of the agreement. The khazanchi of a district treasury guaranteed the Government against loss arising from the misconduct of the stamp darogah, appointed as his agent. The latter became a party to frauds by putting off upon the public forged stamps, in addition to the genuine ones issued from the treasury, into which, however, all the proceeds of sales were paid. The darogah, on whose indent the stamps were issued, made the proceeds appear to correspond in his accounts with the value of the stamps issued to him; but, under cover of the above payment, he misappropriated certain genuine stamps. Held that, although the guarantor might not be responsible in respect of the forgery of the stamps, yet he was responsible on his agreement by reason of the misappropriation of the genuine stamps and the false accounts rendered; and that losses, which in the first instance were caused by the forgery, were brought within the scope of the agreement by the fact of such misappropriation and false accounting. *SHRI KISHEN C. 11. ———— Guarantee on condition of not taking criminal proceedings—Consideration—Compounding felony.—S gave to the creditors of H a guarantee for the payment of the debts due to them by H. As a consideration for this guarantee, the creditors were to abstain from taking criminal proceedings against H for fifteen days, and by implication were to abstain from taking such proceedings altogether if the said debts were paid within that time. Held that such a guarantee could not be enforced by the creditor. A man, to whom a civil debt is due, may take securities for that debt from his debtor, even though the debt arises out of a criminal offence, and he threatens to prosecute for that offence, provided he does not, in consideration of such securities, agree not to prosecute. He must not, however, by stifling a prosecution obtain a guarantee from third parties. KESROWJI TULSIDAS v. HURJIVAN MULJI. I. L. R., 11 Bom., 566

12. ———— Guarantee for rent—Lease—Indemnity—Liability—Continuing guarantee—Death of surety—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 124, 125, cl. (2), 128, 129, 131.—One B proposed to take a lease of zamindari property from M for the period of eight years at a rental of Rs. 900 per annum. M declined to grant the lease until the payment of rent during the term of eight years was guaranteed by one S, the father of the plaintiff. S on his part required a guarantee or indemnity against any rent which might not be paid by B, and which he might under his proposed guarantee become liable to pay. The defendant's father, G, accordingly gave a guarantee to S in the following terms:—"And for your satisfaction, I write that if any money remains due from B on account of the lease for any year or harvest, and if you have to pay the same on account of the suretyship, I am responsible to you to pay that amount to you. Rest assured." S then gave his guarantee to M, and he granted the lease to B. G died on 22nd May 1880. B failed to pay the rent due for the year 1883. M having died, his representatives sued S on his guarantee, and recovered from him the rent due and certain costs and expenses. S then died, and the plaintiff, as his representative, brought this action against defendant, the legal representative of G, to recover the amount of the decree and costs which S had to pay. The Court of first instance decreed the whole claim with costs to be recovered from the estate of G, and this decree was confirmed on appeal by the District Judge. On second appeal it was contended that, under s. 131 of the Indian Contract Act, the death of G was a complete answer to the claim. Held that, assuming that the case was that of a continuing guarantee within the meaning of s. 131 of the Indian Contract Act, still, having regard to the object for which the two guarantees were given, it must be concluded that the parties intended in the one case that the lessor should be guaranteed for all rent which might become due during the currency of the lease, and that S should be guaranteed for any of that rent which by reason of his contract of guarantee he should be made to pay, and consequently, even if it were a continuing guarantee, the liability of G was not determined on his death. Held further that neither G if he were alive, nor on his death the defendant as his representative, could be made liable for costs and expenses which S had incurred in defending the previous suit against him for rent brought by the lessor, there being no evidence to show that S acted as a prudent man would have done in defending the action against him or was authorized by defendant to defend the suit. *Lloyds v. 1. ——— Application to appoint guardian—Minor—Act IX of 1861, ss. 1 and 6—Previous application which had been refused.—A Court is not precluded from entertaining a fresh application for the guardianship of a minor under s. 1, Act IX of 1861, by the circumstance that a previous application of the same sort has been refused. *NEHALE v. 3. ——— Power of Court to appoint guardian of person and estate of a minor.—The power of the Court of Chancery to appoint guardians to infants, whether such infants have property or not, is possessed by the High Court. RE JAGANNATH RAMJI . I. L. R., 19 Bom., 96

4. ——— Inherent power of High Court to appoint guardian—Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890)—Appointment of Hindu father as guardian.—The High Court has the power, irrespective of the provisions of the Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), of appointing a guardian for an infant or his estate. A Hindu father appointed guardian of his infant sons for the purpose of raising money by the mortgage of ancestral immovable property, on its appearing to the Court that by so appointing him guardian better terms were likely to be procured from the mortgagee, and the infants to that extent consequently benefited. 5. ——— Guardianship of female minor—Mahomedan Law—Beng. Reg. X of 1793, s. 21—Act XL of 1858, s. 27—Act IX of 1861.—The effect of s. 21 of Regulation X of 1793 and of s. 27 of Act XL of 1858 is that no person other than a female shall in any case be entrusted with the guardianship of a female minor. Held therefore, where a Mahomedan mother had by marrying a stranger forfeited her right to the guardianship of her children, that in the case of her female children their grandmother was entitled to be appointed guardian to the exclusion of male relatives. And the fact that the proceeding in which the right is sought to be established is under Act IX of 1861 does not affect the rule. FUZECHUR v. KAJO [I. L. R., 10 Calc., 15]

6. ——— Female minor, Right to custody of—Mahomedan law, Shia sect—Act IX of 1861—Act XL of 1858, s. 27.—A Mahomedan father of the Shia sect is entitled to the custody of a daughter above the age of seven years as against the mother. The decision in Fuzechur v. Kajo, I. L. R., 10 Calc., 15, has no application to a case where the father is seeking to get the custody of his daughter. 9. — Guardianship of children of deceased husband.—Act XV of 1856, s. 3—Re-marriage of Hindu widow.—On the re-marriage of a Hindu widow, if neither she nor any other person has been expressly constituted by the will or the testamentary disposition of the deceased husband the guardian of the child, and such child has property of his own sufficient for his support and education whilst a minor, such child should ordinarily be regarded as a child "who has neither father nor mother" in the sense of s. 3 of Act XV of 1856, and in such a case a proper male relative of the deceased husband should ordinarily be appointed guardian of such child in preference to his re-married mother. KHUSHALI v. RANI. I. L. R., 4 All., 195

10. — Guardianship of minor co-sharers.—Act XL of 1858—Guardian and minor—Relation of manager of joint estate to co-sharers under age.—A co-sharer in ancestral family estate under the Mitakshara law, the co-proprietors being minors, though he may have power to manage the estate, is not in consequence the guardian of such minors for the purpose of binding them by the execution of a bond charging the estate; nor is the eldest male member of the family, being of full age, guardian of such minors for the purpose of defending suits brought against them for money advanced in respect of the estate, unless he has obtained a certificate of administration under Act XL of 1858, s. 3. That Act shows that he is not guardian of the minors, the care of whose persons and property (unless taken under the protection of the Court of Wards by s. 2) is subject to the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts. *DURGAPERSAD v. 15. — Rival claimants—Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 17—Relationship.—In appointing a guardian of a minor under Act VIII of 1890, the main question for the Court to determine is what is for the welfare of the minor; in determining this, the Court may take into consideration the nearness of relationship of the applicants as being a circumstance tending to show that the interest of the minor will be better looked after. Before Act VIII of 1890 was passed, no relation other than the father or mother had an absolute right to the custody of a Hindu minor. The law now gives no such absolute right. Krishna Kishore Neogi v. Kadamoye Das, 2 I. L. R., 53, referred to. BEIKTO KORB v. CHAMELA KORB [2 C. W. N., 191]

(2) of that section refers, not to a judicial reference, but to a ministerial act. Proceedings had been taken for the appointment of a guardian of a minor under that section in the High Court and afterwards in a Mofussil Court. The latter reported the case to the High Court, and the Chief Justice thereupon directed that the proceedings in the Mofussil Court should be stayed, and that a Judge of the Original Side of the High Court should hear and determine the matter. Held that such direction was in order, and that the Judge who determined the matter had jurisdiction to do so. Held also that, although a petitioner had failed in his application on all points except the removal of the guardian, he was entitled to his costs up to and

Neither Act XX of 1864 nor the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877, as amended by Act XII of 1879) empowers any Court to appoint a person against his or her will to be a next friend, guardian ad litem, administrator of the estate, or guardian of the person of the minor. S. 458 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877) is not, so far as regards payment of costs, applicable to any person appointed to act as guardian ad litem without his previous assent. S. 3, cl. (b), of Act XV of 1880, preserves jurisdiction to a Court to try a suit against a minor, notwithstanding the appointment of one of its officers to be the minor's guardian ad litem. The decision in Mohun Ishwar v. Haku Rupa, I. L. R., 4 Bom., 638, is superseded by Act XV of 1880, s. 3, cl. GUARDIAN—continued.1. APPOINTMENT—concluded.

The nazir of a Civil Court, who is appointed guardian of the estate of a minor under Act XX of 1864, is not an officer of Government within the meaning of s. 32 of Act XIV of 1869, as amended by s. 15 of Act X of 1876. An officer of Government, in order to come within those enactments, must be a party to a suit in his official capacity. The only officers of Government whom Act XX of 1864 contemplates as guardians of the estate of a minor in their official capacity are the Collector of the district and the public curator, appointed as such under Act XIX of 1841. A Subordinate Judge who, under s. 458 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877, as amended by s. 73 of Act XII of 1879), appoints the nazir or any other officer of his Court to act as guardian of a minor plaintiff or defendant in a suit in his Court, has no jurisdiction to hear it and pass a decree against that officer as guardian ad litem of the minor. *Trimbak Nimbaji v. In a suit against a minor residing in a Native State at a distance from the nazir of the Court who was appointed guardian ad litem, and where the nazir was prevented from conducting the minor's defence without incurring expense which the plaintiff refused to pay, Held that the Court, if it chose, might cancel the appointment of the nazir as guardian ad litem under s. 458 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). NARAYANDAS RAMDAS v. Where an order for the issue of a certificate of administration was made on default of the mother of the infant to appear and show cause why the certificate should not be issued to her, Held that such default in appearance ought not to be accepted as an assent to the issuing of the certificate to the non-appearing party. If no relative or friend of the minor can be found who is willing to take out a certificate, the District Judge should name some officer of his Court or some respectable nominee of the suing creditor of the infant. BABAJI v. bind him personally—Effect of Act VI of 1862 (Bombay), s. 12, in regard to a charge upon a talukhdari estate in the Ahmedabad District during the period of management.—A guardian cannot contract in the name of a ward, so as to impose on him a personal liability. Act VI of 1862 (Bombay), "for the amelioration of the condition of talukhdars in the Ahmedabad Collectorate and for their relief from debt," was intended to deal with all debts and liabilities which could possibly impose a charge upon the talukhdari estate at the end of the period of management; when the estate was to be restored to the talukhdar free of incumbrance, excepting the Government revenue. If debts amounted to more than the surplus of rents during the management, of which the maximum period was twenty years, they were not to be paid. A widow, as guardian of her infant son, the heir of talukhdari estate in the above district, validly transferred villages, part thereof; and in the deed of transfer, to which her ward was by her as his guardian nominally a party, contracted to indemnify the purchaser in case the Government should claim and enforce a right to revenue upon the villages which she transferred as being rent-free. The deed purported to make both guardian and ward personally liable in this respect, and also charged the liability upon other parts of the talukhdari estate. The infant attained majority, and the estate was then placed under management within Act VI of 1862. During the period of management the Government claimed and enforced payment of revenue upon the villages. Held that there was no personal liability on the part of the talukhdar created by the above; also that, if the charge on the estate had been validly made, it fell, at all events, within the terms of s. 12 of Act VI of 1862, absolving estates from liability for debts incurred not only before, but during the period of management. WAGHELA RAJSAJJI v. Act (XL of 1858) does not imply that a sale or mortgage or a lease for more than five years, executed by a certificated guardian without the sanction of the Civil Court, is illegal and void ab initio; but the proviso means that in the absence of such sanction the certificated guardian, who otherwise would have all the powers which the minor would have if he were of age, shall be relegated to the position which he would occupy if he had been granted no certificate at all. If any one chooses to take a mortgage or a lease for a term exceeding five years under these circumstances, the transaction is on the basis of no certificate having been granted. In a suit brought by the guardian of a Mahomedan minor for a declaration that a mortgage-deed executed by the minor's mother was null and void to the extent of the minor's share and for partition and possession of such share, it was found that a considerable proportion of the moneys received by the mortgagor had been applied for the benefit of the minor's estate by discharging incumbrances imposed on it by his deceased father. It appeared that at the time of the mortgage the mother held a certificate of guardianship under the Bengal Minors Act, and that she had not obtained from the Civil Court an order sanctioning the mortgage under s. 18 of that Act. Held that the omission to obtain such sanction did not make the mortgage illegal or void ab initio, but relegated the parties to the position in which they would have been if no certificate had been granted, i.e., that of a transaction by a Mahomedan mother affecting to mortgage the property of her minor son, with whose estate she had no power to interfere. Held that this fell within the class of cases in which it has been decided that if a person sells or mortgages another's property having no legal or equitable right to do so, and that other benefits by the transaction, the latter cannot have it set aside without making restitution to the person whose money has been applied for the benefit of the estate. Held that, even if mortgages executed by a certificated guardian without the sanction required by s. 18 of the Bengal Minors Act were void, the section did not make them illegal; and, with reference to s. 65 of the Contract Act, the plaintiff could not obtain a decree for a declaration that the mortgage was inoperative as against his share, except on condition of his making restitution to the extent of any moneys advanced by the defendant under the mortgage-deed which had gone to the benefit of the plaintiff's estate, or had been expended on his maintenance, education, or marriage. *Mauji Ram v. The necessity had been urgent, the terms of the deed fair, and the money had been duly applied; but the guardians had not obtained the sanction of the Court as directed by s. 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890. On its being contended that the mortgage was invalid and incapable of being enforced, —Held that a mortgage so executed was not void, but only voidable; and that the defendant was entitled to avoid the mortgage, but only on the condition of restoring any benefit received by him thereunder to the person from whom it had been received. The fact that the person who had received the benefit was the defendant did not alter his position. SINAYA PILLAI v. MUNISAMI A. AM . . . I. L. R., 23 Mad., 260

An assignment of a mortgage, therefore, by a widow acting as natural guardian of her minor son, but who has not obtained a certificate under the Act, is not invalid, because effected without the sanction of the Court. Where a widow acting as natural guardian of her minor son assigned a mortgage which had been executed to her deceased husband for a consideration, a part of which was a sum due under a decree, to the assignee, —Held that such an assignment was not invalid under s. 462 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877). Assuming that section to be applicable to the compromise of a decree, the circumstance that the compromise was voidable would only affect the consideration for the assignment by reducing its amount. The plaintiff sued as assignee of a mortgage to recover the debt due from the mortgagors personally and from the property mortgaged. The assignor was a Hindu widow, acting as natural guardian of her minor son. The consideration for the assignment was a sum of Rs 68-9 due to the plaintiff under a decree obtained by him and Rs 30-7 cash paid. The lower Courts held that, as to the Rs 68-9, the transaction really amounted to a satisfaction or adjustment of the decree under which it was due, and that, as such adjustment had not been certified to the Court, it was invalid; they further held that the consideration for the assignment of the mortgage having so far failed, the assignment was without adequate consideration, and therefore they dismissed the suit. On appeal to the High Court, —Held that, although in ordinary cases it is the rule that, where an assignee sues on his assignment and proves it, an adverse party cannot take the objection that there was no consideration, yet that, under the peculiar circumstances of this case, that rule did not apply. The mortgage-deed was assigned by a widow acting as the natural guardian of a minor, and a great part of the consideration for the assignment had admittedly failed, the confirmation of the decree which formed part of the consideration not having been certified to the Court. There was on the record no admission of the assignment by the assignor. It might be that the minor in a suit by his next friend or guardian appointed under Act XX of 1864 might dispute the assignment. The defendants, in order to protect themselves, had a right to call on the plaintiff to prove the assignment, and a Court ought, in the interests of justice, to see that they were so protected. The assignment was on behalf of a minor, and the person acting as his guardian had not admitted it, and it might be that even her admission would not be binding on him, since he was not a party to the suit. It was necessary that the point should be so tried and determined as to bind the minor, and to do that it was essential that he should be made a party to the suit. The Court, therefore, reversed the decree of the lower Courts and remanded the case. MANISHANKAR PRANJIVAN v. BAI MULI . I. L. R., 12 Bom., 696

61. ————— Certificated guardian—Mortgage by such guardian without Court's permission—Validity of such mortgage—Sanction under Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 305—Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), ss. 29 and 30—Bombay Minors Act (Bombay Act XX of 1864).—A was the owner of the property in dispute. He mortgaged it with possession to defendant No. 1 in 1884. A died leaving an adopted son, a minor. Thereupon one V was appointed by the District Court to be guardian of the person and property of the minor under Act XX of 1864. In September 1890, V mortgaged the same property to plaintiff with the sanction of the Subordinate Judge's Court obtained under s. 305 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882). In 1895 the plaintiff as second mortgagee brought this suit to redeem the earlier mortgage of 1884. Held that V as certificated guardian had no power to mortgage the minor's property without the previous permission of the Court which had appointed him to act as guardian, and that the sanction of another Court given under s. 305 of the Code of Civil Procedure was not sufficient to legalize the mortgage. Held also that such mortgage would have been absolutely void under Act XX of 1864, but was only voidable under s. 30 of Act VIII of 1890, at the instance of any other person affected thereby. DATTARAM v. GANGARAM I. L. R., 28 Bom., 287

62. — Act XL of 1858, s. 18—Power of guardian of minor to mortgage minor's property—Rate of interest.—A guardian, to whom a certificate had been granted under Act XL of 1858, having obtained under s. 18 an order of a Court authorizing the raising of money by mortgage of the minor's immovables, mortgaged accordingly. In the order so obtained, the rate of interest at which the money was to be raised was not specified. On a question whether, there being no proof of the necessity or expediency of agreeing to pay interest at a rate so high as eighteen per cent., the agreement to pay at this rate was rightly set aside by the High Court, which decreed interest at twelve per cent.,—Held that the proper construction of the order, and the one most favourable to the lender regarding the rate of interest, was that the guardian was authorized to borrow only at a reasonable rate of interest, and that consequently the decree of the High Court was right. GANGAFERSHAD SAHU v. 63. — Minor, Interest of, not represented—Partition of joint property in which minor was interested.—In a suit between coproprietors, plaintiffs sought to recover exclusive possession of a mouzah which they claimed to have derived in a partition made some years before, and to have enjoyed it under the terms of that partition until they were dispossessed from it by defendant No. 1, one D N, who, on the other hand, denied that he had more than a 4-anna share, alleging that plaintiffs were not entitled to the whole mouzah, and that the partition had been fraudulent and had been effected while he was a minor. It appeared that no formalities had been observed in coming to the partition, and no record preserved of the proceedings except a list representing the result arrived at, that the division was effected simply on reference to a thakbust map, an average rental per bigha taken as the basis thereof, and a number of bighas allotted in proportion to each individual's share. None of the ordinary precautions were taken for the protection of the interest of minors. Held that the partition was not made in such way, and under such circumstances as to be in itself obligatory on the minor, who had the option of repudiating it when he came of age or within a reasonable period after that date. Held also that the minor could only be held to have accepted the partition if he had acted in such a way to the plaintiffs as to lead them naturally to suppose that he had done so. KALEH SUNKER SANNYAL v. B raised the defence of relinquishment by A's grandmother and guardian. The Munsif decided against A on the merits, and his decision was upheld by the Judge. Held on special appeal that to make the relinquishment, if any, valid against A, it ought to have been shown that it was for A's benefit. [1 B. L. R., A. C., 17; 10 W. R., 50]

In the same case on review, LOCH, J., held that the judgment of the High Court on special appeal must be reversed as being ultra vires, for that the question of injury to the minor was not urged in the Court below; no issue was raised on that point, and even if the relinquishment of the jote by the guardian did turn out to the disadvantage of the minor, that was not sufficient ground for setting aside the act of the guardian as invalid, provided that, at the time it was done, it appeared to be for the interest of the minor, and was done in good faith. GLOVER, J., held that the conclusion of the High Court on special appeal was justified, but he was willing to remand the case to the Judge below to find the fact whether or not the relinquishment by the guardian was made in good faith for the interests of the minor. MATHURANATH DUTT v. 83. — Necessity for borrowing—Mortgage by de facto guardian or manager without de jure title.—Under the Hindu law, the right of a bond fide incumbrancer who has taken from a de facto guardian or manager a charge on lands created honestly for the purpose of saving the estate, or for the benefit of the estate, is not (provided the circumstances would support the charge had it emanated from a de facto and de jure manager) affected by the want of union of the de facto with the de jure title. Under the Hindu law, the power of a manager for an infant heir to charge an ancestral estate is a limited and qualified one, to be exercised in a case of need, or for the benefit of the estate. Where the charge is one that a prudent owner would make in order to benefit the estate, the bond fide lender is not affected by the precedent mismanagement of the estate. The lender is bound to enquire into the necessities for the loan, and to satisfy himself that the manager is acting for the benefit of the estate. But if he does so enquire and acts honestly, the real existence of an alleged sufficient and reasonably credited necessity is not a condition precedent to the validity of his charge, and he is not bound to see to the application of the money. The mere creation of a charge by a manager, securing a proper debt, cannot be viewed as improvident management; and a bond fide creditor should not suffer when he has acted honestly and with due caution, but is himself deceived. *HUNOOMAN PERSHAD PANDAY v. 94. ————— Alienation of minor's property by intervention of Court—Suit to set aside alienation—Purchaser of minor's property.—An alienation of property during the owner's minority is open to be questioned when the minor comes of age, even if it was effected partly through the intervention of a Civil Court, e.g., under a decree on foreclosure proceedings. A party justifying a title so obtained against a minor must show not only that he was acting honestly in the transaction, but that facts existed at the time of the mortgage such as would reasonably support the conclusion that there was a necessity for the alienation, and that the mortgagor had authority to give a good title as the minor's agent. BUZUNG SABOY SINGH v. 95. ————— Sale of minor's property by guardian—Proof of legal necessity for sale.—The mother and guardian of two minors borrowed Rs. 1,000 ostensibly for their marriage expenses. One of the minors subsequently brought a suit against the purchasers to set aside the sale. Held that it was obligatory on the defendants to prove that in selling the property the mother acted under an unavoidable necessity in the interests of her minor sons, and that the decree against the minors was such as would bind their interests. LOOTY HOSEIN v. 96. ————— Guardian and minor—Sale of minor's property—Legal necessity.—Where a guardian conveyed the property of her minor son by a deed of sale in which she did not in terms describe herself as his guardian, Held that the omission was immaterial, since it clearly appeared from the deed that it was the minor's property which formed the subject of sale. HANUMAN PERSAUD v. BABOOS MUNRAJ KOONCEREE, 6 Moore's I. A., 393, and JADOONATH CHUCKERBUTTY v. TWEEDIE, 11 W. R., 20, followed. A widow, guardian of her minor son, being left after her husband's death in a state of extreme poverty, sold the entire property of the minor for less than one-fourth of its real market value, by a sale-deed reciting that the object of the sale was the minor's maintenance and marriage. It was found that the sale was obtained by the vendee by taking advantage of the guardian's poverty, and that there was nothing to show that in purchasing the property he had satisfied himself of the actual existence of the necessities for which the sale purported to be made. Held that the recital in the deed of the objects of sale was in itself no evidence of the necessity of the alienation. RAYLAKHI DEBIA v. GAKUL CHANDRA CHORDHRY, 3 B. L. R., P. C., 57, followed. Held also that the needy circumstances of the minor did not by themselves constitute a sufficient legal necessity for such an alienation. Under the Hindu law, the maintenance or marriage of a minor may be a legitimate cause for the alienation of his property by the guardian, but cannot justify a Court of equity in upholding a bargain obviously imprudent and reckless. The best test is whether the alienation would have been reasonably and prudently made by the minor himself had he been of full age. Held further that, upon such an alienation being set aside in consequence of a suit brought by the minor, the vendee was entitled to be recouped by the plaintiff to the extent of any portion of the purchase-money which had been appropriated to the latter's benefit. PARAN CHANDRA PAL v. 99. ————— Sale of minor's property for transactions by guardian not for benefit of minor—Want of necessity—Ground for setting aside sale.—In 1850 the guardian of a minor (his step-mother) by an ikrarnamah among other things charged the minor's ancestral estate with the payment of Rs27,000 in favour of L, the amount of his alleged claim against the estate, respecting which an appeal was then pending, but to which estate he was himself a debtor, undertaking at the same time to prosecute certain claims against M, L agreeing to advance money for that purpose and to resist certain claims brought by M against the minor's estate. In February 1851, M having obtained judgment against the estate for Rs26,986, and taken out execution thereon, the estate was advertised for sale on the 20th of that month. To prevent the sale, L advanced the amount of the judgment-debt, and on the 19th of that month commenced a suit against the guardian, in which he claimed the Rs26,986, the amount advanced by him, and the Rs27,000 agreed to be paid him by the ikrarnama, and the further sum of Rs1,854 alleged to have been paid by him for the proceedings against M, making together Rs55,341. On the following day the guardian filed a confession of judgment admitting the debt, hypothecating the minor's estate, and undertaking to pay the same by instalments, with the exception of the Rs27,000, at 6 per cent. interest. The instalments not being paid, L in 1853 took out execution on the judgment, and under the execution put up the estate for sale, and became the purchaser himself. On the minor attaining his majority, he brought a suit to set aside the sale, impeaching the transaction as fraudulent and collusively obtained by L from his late guardian. The Courts in India set aside the sale on the ground of fraud, and decreed the restitution of the estate, with meme profits and damages, subject to the repayment by way of reduction of the Rs26,986 at 6 per cent. Upon appeal such decree was affirmed by the Judicial Committee, first on the ground that the transaction was fraudulent and collusive and prejudicial to the estate of the minor, there being no evidence to show the necessity for the guardian obtaining the pecuniary assistance sought, or to justify her submitting to L's extraordinary terms contained in the ikrarnama, by allowing, without consideration, his doubtful claim against the minor's estate, to which he really was a debtor himself; and secondly, that L, who set up the charge, had failed to relieve himself of the burden which the Hindu law cast upon him of showing that he had at least good ground for supposing that the transaction was for the benefit of the minor's estate. In setting aside the ikrarnama and sale, interest was allowed to L on the Rs26,000 advanced by him at the rate of 6 per cent. contracted for in the ikrarnama in lieu of 5 per cent. awarded by the Sudder Court. Such a modification of the decree of the Court below held not sufficient to deprive the respondent of his costs of appeal. The case of Ali Hussein v. Badal Khan, S. D. A., N. W. P., 1863, 19th May, where it was held that there is no difference to be made between an innocent purchaser and one tainted with fraud which had brought about an execution-sale, observed upon and discredited from. *LALLA BUNSEEDHUR v. 100. ————— Hindu law—Joint family—Release obtained from person just come of age.—The plaintiff as a joint member of the defendant's family sued to set aside a release obtained from him by the defendant and for partition, etc. The plaintiff was the son of one L, and the defendant was the plaintiff's nephew and grandson of L, being the son of T and elder brother of the plaintiff. The plaintiff alleged that L and his brother J were joint and had carried on a family business; that J died childless, and that on L's death in 1868 the whole family property passed into the hands of T, his eldest son, on whose death it came into the possession of the defendant as eldest male member of the family, although belonging to a younger generation than the plaintiff. The plaintiff alleged that in 1882, shortly after he came of age, the defendant induced him to sign a release of all his claims upon the estate in consideration of the sum of Rs25,000. He prayed that this release might be set aside. The defendant denied the plaintiff's allegations as to the release. Held that the release must be set aside. The defendant stood in the relation of a guardian to the plaintiff. Releases executed immediately after a ward comes of age are looked upon with suspicion. The circumstances must show the fullest deliberation on the part of the ward and perfect good faith on the part of the guardian. The circumstances of this release did not fulfil these requirements. There was not that absolute fairness and good faith required by the relations of the parties, and the signing of the release was an improvident act which a prudent person would not have done with full knowledge of the circumstances. *TOOLSKYDAS LUDHA v. 104. ————— Sale by guardian on behalf of minor—Repayment of purchase-money before minor allowed to recover estate.—The sale by S's mother of his share, during his minority, in the estate of his deceased father was rightly held to be invalid; but his claim to recover possession of the share from the purchasers, who had redeemed a mortgage existing on the estate created by his father, without tendering payment of his share of the mortgage debt, was properly dismissed. *PANA ALI v. Although the Court of Wards had no power to alienate the land of a minor of whose estate it had charge, yet possession might have been lawfully taken of the land for a public purpose under, and in conformity with, the Land Acquisition Act, 1870, if there had been due compliance with the provisions of the Act, as regards compensation to the minor's estate. Where, however, compensation had not been given, and a merely nominal consideration had passed, the Collector not having acted, as the representative of the Court of Wards, so as to protect the interests of the minor,—Held that no valid title to the land was established as against the ward, and that, on his attaining full age, he could recover it with mesne profits. *LUCHMESWAR SINGH v. Act XX of 1864, ss. 18 and 29—Guardian's authority to contract debts for the marriage of his ward without the sanction of the Court—Debts contracted for pilgrimage expenses—Guardian's power to acknowledge debts—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 19.—A minor cannot be bound personally by contracts entered into by a guardian which do not purport to charge his estate. Act XX of 1864 gives no power to a guardian or administrator to bind his ward by personal covenants. A guardian appointed under Act XX of 1864 can pledge the property of his ward for purposes beneficial to the minor, but not as a security for money previously borrowed which the minor was under no obligation to pay. Under s. 29 of Act XX of 1864, a guardian cannot contract a debt for the marriage of his ward without the sanction of the Court. Debts contracted by the guardian of a minor for a pilgrimage not undertaken in the discharge of an urgent spiritual duty, when it was obligatory on him to perform, are not necessities for which the minor would be held liable. A guardian has no authority to acknowledge a debt on behalf of his ward so as to give the creditor a fresh start for the period of limitation, as he is not an agent on the part of his ward within the meaning of s. 19 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). *Sobhanandri Appa Rao v. 113. ——— Delay of minor on coming of age in repudiating act of guardian.—Mere delay on the part of a ward, after attainment of majority, in repudiating an alienation made by his guardian, cannot be treated as a ratification of the guardian's act, but only as evidence of ratification. *RAJ NARAIN DEB CHOWDHEY v. 114. ——— Contract by guardian—Delay of minor on coming of age in repudiating contract.—Long delay in repudiating a contract by a minor on his attaining majority, when such delay is wholly unaccounted for, is sufficient ground for inferring a ratification of the contract. BORDONATH DEY v. GOOLBER

116. ——— Mode of ratification—Suit to set aside sale made by mother as guardian—Minor acting for mother in former suit.—In a suit to set aside a sale effected by plaintiff's mother during his minority, it appearing that plaintiff, eleven months after attaining his majority, signed for his mother a written statement in another suit, to the effect that the property had been sold by her to the defendant, and that he in that suit conducted his mother's defence, which was that the purchaser from her was entitled to what he claimed, it was held that he must be considered to have acquiesced in and ratified the sale. *KRISHNAKRISHNA DASS v. [9 W. R., 571]

117. ——— Transaction prejudicial to estate—Formal ratification, Necessity of.—The guardian of a minor as manager of the minor's estate is bound in duty to abstain from entering into any arrangement beneficial to himself and detrimental to the estate; and if any such arrangement has been entered into, it is incumbent on him immediately after the minor comes of age to obtain from him not an accidental, but a distinct formal ratification. *PROSUNNO COOMAR GHUTTUCK v. 118. ——— Duty of minor—Compromise, Suit to set aside—Proof of fraud.—It is not incumbent upon a guardian to contest every claim made against the infant's estate. The judicial committee, reversing the finding of the Courts below, refused to set aside a compromise (confirmed by a decree of Court) by the former guardian of the plaintiff of a claim against his estate for debt after sixteen years, the plaintiff having failed to prove that the suit was fictitious, and the compromise fraudulent and collusive. *LAKRAJ ROY v. 120. ——— Apparent acquiescence—
Compromise by mother for minor sons.—The transactions into which guardians enter on behalf of their wards must secure to the latter some demonstrable advantage, or avert some obvious mischief, in order to obtain recognition in the Courts. Where a compromise was alleged to have been entered into by a mother on behalf of her two minor sons on the one hand and an adult member of the family on the other, agreeing to give the latter more than had been awarded by a judicial decision, it was held that the compromise was not binding on the minors. Apparent acquiescence in such a compromise by one of the minors after arriving at majority, though evidence against him, is not evidence of a conclusive character when not continued for any considerable time. DMARMAJI VAMAN v. GURRAY SHRINIVAS
[10 Bom., 311]

121. ——— Ratification by acquiescence—Minor, Contract by.—A sued in 1886 to recover certain estates from B, alleging claim under his adoption which took place in 1865. In 1875 A, being still a minor, relinquished by deed his claim to the estates for Rs. 12,000, but now alleged that he thought he was relinquishing it only in favour of the defendant's predecessor in title who died in 1883, having been in possession of the estates since 1867. The plaintiff attained his majority in 1878. Held that, whether the cause of action arose in 1865 or 1867, it was equally barred from 1879; that the plaintiff was bound by the deed; assuming the plaintiff was a minor of 15 years of age at the date of the deed of relinquishment, it is not likely he would not have understood its effect, or that he failed to ascertain it when he attained his majority in 1878. His conduct of acquiescence, moreover, in the deed of relinquishment amounted to ratification of it. VENKATACHALAM v. MAHALAKSHMANNA

123. ——— Contract entered into by disqualified proprietor whilst his property was under the charge of the Court of Wards—N. W. P. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873), s. 205B—Court of Wards.—S. 205 of Act No. XIX of 1873 does not cease to have effect when property to which it might apply is released from the custody of the Court of Wards. Such property cannot at any time be taken in execution of a decree obtained on a contract entered into by a ward of the Court at a time when his property was under the superintendence of the Court. HIMANCHAL SINGH v. JHAMAN LAL . . . I. L. R., 22 All., 384

124. ——— Power to enter into contracts—Act VIII of 1879, ss. 23, 24—Act XIX of 1873 (N. W. P. Land Revenue Act), s. 205.—A suit was brought against a disqualified proprietor for money due on a bond, given while her property was under the superintendence of the Court of Wards. The Collector was made a defendant to this suit "because the property of the defendant obligor had come under the superintendence of the Court of Wards before the execution of the bond." Held that the Collector's status in the suit—namely, as representative ad litem of the defendant—was sufficiently described to entitle him to raise the question of the legal capacity of the defendant to enter into the bond. The mere disqualification of a proprietor to manage his estate does not carry with it a general and absolute disqualification to enter into any contracts at all. Held therefore, where a person whose property was under the superintendence of the Court of Wards borrowed money and gave a bond for the payment of the same, and was sued on the bond in the name of the Collector, that the Court was competent to make a decree against such disqualified proprietor. COLLECTOR OF BENARES v. Subsequently B's certificate was taken from her, and was granted to A, who brought a suit on the minor's behalf against B's sureties for the value of the property intrusted to B. The security bonds in question were not assigned by the Judge to A. Held that, inasmuch as the plaintiff was seeking to enforce contracts which were never made with him or any other person in the character of legal representative of the minor, he had no legal status to maintain the suit. Also that no equitable rights were created in the minor by the bonds, which would render the suit maintainable. Quere—Whether the Judge of a District Court is competent to call upon a person to whom he grants a certificate under Act XL of 1858 to furnish security; and whether, where he has done so and security-bonds have been given to him, he can assign them in the manner provided in s. 257 of the Succession Act, 1865. *AMAR NATH v. cl. 2—Sale in execution of a decree—Sale of talukhdari estate—Sanction of Government.—A talukhdar mortgaged his talukhdari estate in 1883, i. e., prior to the passing of the Gujarat Talukhdars Act (Bombay Act VI of 1888). In 1893 the mortgagee sued on his mortgage and, without having the sanction of the Governor in Council, obtained an order in the District Court for the sale of the mortgaged property, that Court holding that the provisions of s. 31, cl. 2, of Bombay Act VI of 1888 did not apply to the case of a mortgage effected prior to the passing of the Act. On appeal to the High Court, Held, reversing the order of the District Court, that cl. 2 of s. 31 of Bombay Act VI of 1888 applied to the case, and that a sale in execution of a decree was such an alienation as came within the terms of the section and required the previous sanction of the Governor in Council. The Court, however, directed the District Judge to give the plaintiffs a reasonable time for the production of the sanction, and ordered that, in case they produced it, the order for sale should be affirmed, otherwise the plaintiffs' application for sale should be dismissed. *Nagar Pragji v. As the person against whom the writ was applied for had acted under the written order of the Governor General in Council, the Court would not direct the writ to issue. IN RE AMEER KHAN 6 B. L. R., 392

On appeal in the same case, it was held that, assuming the power of a Judge of the High Court to issue a writ of habeas corpus, and assuming the right of appeal against an order refusing such writ, it appearing that the prisoner was in custody under a warrant in the form prescribed by Regulation III of 1818, the detention was legal. The detention, to be legal, need only be covered by an actually existing warrant of the Governor General in Council in the form prescribed, without regard to the lawfulness of the arrest. IN RE AMEER KHAN . 6 B. 2. ———— Accused becoming insane during criminal trial—Detention in lunatic asylum after regaining sanity.—An accused person, having become insane during his trial, was placed in a lunatic asylum and was detained there after becoming sane. Held that such detention was not illegal, and he was not entitled to his discharge, but should be made over to the authorities for continuation of his trial. IN THE MATTER OF ELDRED I Hyde, 173

3. ———— Return to writ—Custody of prisoner in jail—Return by Sheriff.—The Sheriff need not specify in his return on a habeas corpus that the prisoner has been continuously in his custody, and a prisoner who has not been transferred by the Sheriff to the custody of the jailor by a separate warrant, and is brought up on the writs by the Sheriff, is to be considered as in the custody of the Sheriff. *SPEYER v. 4. ———— Affidavit to controvert return—Amendment of return—Custody of minor—56 Geo. III, c. 100.—The return to the writ of habeas corpus must be taken to be true, and cannot be controverted by affidavit. In England, 56 Geo. III, c. 10, s. 4, allows affidavits to be used to controvert the return in criminal matters, but that statute does not apply to this country. The return to a writ of habeas corpus can, however, be amended. A girl under sixteen years of age has not such a discretion as enables her, by giving her consent, to protect any one from the criminal consequences of inducing her to leave the protection of a lawful guardian; but where the return to a writ of habeas corpus stated that the girl was above the age of sixteen (though her mother stated her to be of the age of thirteen years and nine months), the Court held that she was of years of discretion to choose for herself under whose protection she would remain. *QUEEN v. where it was held that the return to a writ of habeas corpus is not necessarily conclusive, and does not preclude enquiry into the truth of the matters alleged therein, although 56 Geo. III, c. 100, does not apply to this country.

5. ———— Mahomedan law—Husband and wife—Custody of wife.—On an application for a writ of habeas corpus to bring before the Court M, a female infant, who was alleged to be in the unlawful custody of S, a Mahomedan, it was stated that M's father was a Jew by birth, who had embraced the Mahomedan faith many years ago, but had since returned to the Jewish persuasion; that her mother was a Mahomedan woman; that she was detained by S on the allegation that she was married to him, but that the alleged marriage was invalid by reason of the want of consent of her father; and that she was of the age of about nine years, and had not attained puberty; and a writ was thereupon granted. The return stated that M, being then about ten years of age, was married with the consent of her mother to S; that after the marriage, M and her mother had lived with S until her mother, at the instigation of the father, had left the house of S, taking M with her; that S had thereupon instituted a charge against the father and mother for enticing away and detaining M, on which the Police Magistrate considered the marriage proved, and ordered her to be delivered into the custody of S. The High Court refused to consider the custody illegal, and ordered the writ to be quashed. IN RE KHATIJA BIBI, 5 B. L. R., 557, distinguished. IN THE MATTER OF MAHIM BIBI 13 B. L. R., 160

6. ———— Constitution of Small Cause Courts—Privilege from arrest.—The Small Cause Court in the Presidency town is not a Court of co-ordinate jurisdiction with the High Court, but a Court of inferior jurisdiction and subject to the order and control of the High Court. Therefore, where on a prisoner being brought up to the High Court on a writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum, the return of the jailor stated that the prisoner was detained under a warrant of arrest issued in execution of a decree of the Small Cause Court,—Held that the return was not conclusive, but the prisoner was entitled to show by affidavit that he was privileged from arrest at the time he was taken into custody. IN THE MATTER OF OMRILOLL DEY

1 ——— Grant by Government in inam—Bom. Reg. V of 1827, s. 4—Limitation.—The grant of a village in inam by the Government cannot deprive the meymoodars of their hereditary rights. To entitle the person in possession to the enjoyment of the office and receipt of the dues from the village, it is not essential that the duties of the office should have been actually performed, if the party was prepared to discharge them when required. Claims to recover arrears of such dues are limited by s. 4, Regulation V of 1827 of the Bombay Code, to 12 years. BREMA SUNKUR v. JAMARJE SHAPORJE

2. — Hereditary gomastah appointed to collect deshmukhi allowances—Derivation of his title such that the deshmukh could not dismiss him—Sanad, Construction of.—As to whether a deshmukh could dismiss the holder of the paid office of hereditary gomastah, appointed to collect, in the vatan of the former, the deshmukhi allowances from the villages, it was shown by documentary evidence that the gomastah's ancestor had been appointed by the ruling power of the day, from which authority also the deshmukhi had been derived. It was also shown that the hereditary gomastah's title was independent of the deshmukh, and that the latter could not displace him. No change had been made under the British rule from what had prevailed as to this under the Peishwa; but such evidence as there was, accorded with the above. Held that the right of the gomastah to act as such and to receive the payments had either been granted or else had been so recognized and confirmed by an authority binding on the deshmukh that he could not deprive the gomastah of his office, which the Government had conferred upon him; and that the deshmukh had not the right, as against him, to collect the allowance himself directly, either from the village officers or from the treasury. RAMCHANDRA NARSINGHAY v. Bombay Act III of 1874. Kalu Narayan Kulkarni v. Hanmappa bin Bhimappa, I. L. R., 5 Bom., 435, referred to and approved. The childless widow of a vatandar, deceased in 1847, was the recognized vatandar in possession in 1865. She mortgaged two villages of the vatan to the father of the respondents. The latter two, after litigation, retained possession in 1866, by order of the Commissioner in the Revenue Department, until there should be a decree of Court to the contrary. The widow, according to the judgment below, had held the vatan adversely to her late husband's son, the plaintiff, who was born in 1848 of her co-widow, and he was the true heir, entitled from his birth. But the High Court gave effect to the adverse possession of the widow for the period of limitation supporting the mortgage. The plaintiff was the sole heir of the widow, his step-mother, who died in 1877. The appellant contended that the vatan, as inherited by him, was free from the mortgage encumbrance, and that he was entitled to possession. Held, reversing the decree of the High Court, that the mortgage was void against the heir, and had no force beyond the life of the vatandar who had executed it. The decree of the Subordinate Judge to that effect and for possession was maintained. PADAPA v. SWAMIRAO SHRINIVAS

3. — Bom. Reg. XVI of 1827, s. 20—Adverse possession.—A sale by a vatandar of vatan property, executed at a time when Regulation XVI of 1827 was still in force, was in its inception void against the heir of the vatandar, nor did it become in any way the more valid against such heir by reason of the repeal of that Regulation by Act III (Bombay) of 1874. Adverse possession only begins to run against the heir from the time when he is entitled to succeed to the possession of the vatan property, i. e., from the date of the death of the vatandar. RAVLONIRAY v. On his (defendant's) death in 1869 his son succeeded to the estate and obtained a removal of the attachment before 1874. The plaintiff thereon applied for a fresh attachment of the property. Held that, the mortgagor having only a life-interest, the vatan came into the hands of his son free of the mortgage. JAGJIVANDAS JAYERDAS v. 1. ——— s. 4 — Hereditary Offices Act Amendment Act (Bombay Act V of 1886), s. 2 — “Hereditary office” — Village sutar — Bombay Government Resolution No. 519 of 1882. — The duties with which s. 4 of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act (Bombay Act III of 1874) deals are confined to duties in which Government, as being responsible for the administration of the country, is directly interested. The definition of “hereditary office” does not extend to the duties of a carpenter, which, though useful to the village community, are not matters with which Government has any direct concern. Held therefore that the village sutar (carpenter) does not hold an “hereditary office” within the meaning of that section. YESU v. 2. ——— and s. 5 — Vatandar — Person having an “hereditary interest” — Hereditary Offices Act Amendment Act (Bombay Act V of 1886), s. 2. — G, by his will, devised all his property, which was vatan property, to V, a distant cousin. The plaintiff, as the nearest heir of G, claimed the property, contending that V had not an “hereditary interest” in the vatan within the meaning of s. 4 of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act, that he was not a vatandar capable of taking under the will of G within the meaning of s. 5, and that the will of G was therefore inoperative. Held that V had not “an hereditary interest” in the vatan, and that the devise to him was therefore inoperative. The expression in s. 4, “persons having an hereditary interest in a vatan,” means persons having a present interest of an hereditary character in the vatan, and does not include persons who may have a spes successionis, however remote. “Hereditary interest” means an interest acquired by inheritance as distinguished from an interest acquired by purchase, gift, or other modes of acquisition. CHINAYA v. A kulkarni vatan was owned by two brothers A and B. B died first and A became the last male holder. A died in 1881, leaving a widow who held the vatan until her death in 1892. On her death, B's widow took a son in adoption. The adopted son filed a suit to establish his title to the vatan against the defendant, who was a male member of the family and had been registered by the revenue authorities as the vatandar on the death of A's widow. Held that the plaintiff could not succeed, the defendant having a better title to the vatan than the plaintiff or his adoptive mother under s. 2 of Bombay Act V of 1886. KRISHNAJI TAMAJI v. 1. — and s. 10.—Effect of certificate under s. 10.—The plaintiff sued as purchaser at a Court sale of the interest of defendant No. 1, to redeem and recover possession of the land in dispute, alleging that it had been mortgaged by defendant No. 1 to defendant No. 2. Defendant No. 1 denied the mortgage, and that he had any title to the land, which he said belonged to B and formed a part of B's deshmukhi vatan. B having died, leaving a minor widow, sued as defendant No. 4 in the suit, the estate was administered by the Collector. On the application of the minor's personal guardians, the Collector was joined as a party. The Collector had also certified to the Court, under s. 10 of Act III of 1874, that the land formed part of a vatan. The District Judge rejected the plaintiff's claim and ordered the sale to be set aside. On appeal by the plaintiff to the High Court, Held, following Shankar Gopal v. Babaji Lakshman, I. L. R., 19 Bom., 550, that the Judge ought not to have acted on the certificate by setting the sale aside. Ss. 9 and 10 of Act III of 1874 were not applicable to the case, as the first defendant, whose interest was purchased by the plaintiff, was not a vatandar. BRABU BALAPA v. NANA I. L. When the Vatan Act (Bombay Act III of 1874) came into operation, no order as regards remuneration was made, but the plaintiff, subject to objection, was appointed to officiate. The plaintiff thereupon sued to eject the defendant. Held that the lease to the defendant as a partial alienation was invalid under Regulation XVI of 1827, s. 20; that the invalidity thereof was not removed by the Collector not being called upon to declare it to be null and void under s. 9, cl. 1, of Bombay Act III of 1874; and that the plaintiff as life-owner was entitled to possession. *PURSHOTTAM TALVAR v. 2. — Certificate of Collector—Removal of attachment made by Civil Court.—The applicant held a decree, dated the 23rd June 1861, against Ismail Ali Khan and another for Rs. 956-12-7, of which he had already recovered Rs. 742-4-5. On the 24th December 1866, he applied to the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Pen for the attachment of the proceeds of a certain vatan, belonging to the judgment-debtors, in satisfaction of the balance Rs. 214-9-2 due to him, and under his decree, on the 7th February 1868, the Court attached the proceeds by a prohibitory order to the Mamlatdar of Pen. While this attachment was pending, the Collector, on the 13th December 1878, sent a certificate to the Court, and informed it that the proceeds of the vatan were not liable to attachment under ss. 10 and 18 of Bombay Act III of 1874. The certificate referred to the profits of the vatan which had accrued due before the passing of the Act, and also to those which had been subsequently assigned by the Collector as remuneration of the officiator. The Court, on receiving it, removed the attachment and dismissed the application on the 11th January 1879. The order was affirmed in appeal. On an application to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction, Held that the Collector was authorized, by the first part of s. 10 of the Vatan Act, to inform the Court by his certificate that a portion of the profits attached had been assigned by him as remuneration to the officiator, and that the Court was bound, on receiving it, to remove the pending attachment. Held also that the arrears due at the date of the Act, and which had not been assigned, fell within the latter part of the section. The High Court accordingly dismissed the application with costs. JAGJIVAN v. ISMAIL ALI KHAN I. L. R., 4 Bom., 426

The amount found due to Rudrapa was Rs. 20,000, and, as security for this sum, B, by deed, dated A.D. 1818, mortgaged to Rudrapa certain vatani lands, and also an annual allowance of Rs. 200 received by him (B) on account of a rumam. Under this deed these properties were to be held by Rudrapa in lieu of interest until repayment of the principal of Rs. 20,000. A dispute subsequently arose as to the amount of the rumam, and A, the son and successor of B, the mortgagor, having by attachment interrupted Rudrapa's possession (as mortgagor) of the vatani lands, he (Rudrapa)

presented a petition of complaint to the Sub-Collector of B, who issued an order, on the 10th November 1830, to the Mamlatdar directing him to require the parties to refer their disputes to arbitration. The arbitration took place, and on the 20th August 1831 both parties executed a rajinama (exhibit No. 20), which set forth the terms of settlement agreed upon. Rudrapa was to hold the mortgaged lands and rusum (annual allowance) for fifty years. At the end of that period the principal debt and all interest thereon was to be deemed to have been paid off, and the lands and rusum were to be surrendered to the mortgagor or his heir. Under this rajinama, the mortgages held uninterrupted possession of the mortgaged property until A.D. 1872. A, one of the signatories of the rajinama, died in 1848, and was succeeded as vatandar by R, and R again was succeeded by the present plaintiff, who in 1872 brought this suit against the defendant (Rudrapa's son) to recover possession of the mortgaged property. The Subordinate Judge held that the mortgage of A.D. 1818 was not genuine, and that the rajinama of A.D. 1831, being an alienation of vatani property after the passing of Regulation XVI of 1827, s. 20, was invalid as against vatandars subsequent to the grantor. He therefore made a decree for the plaintiff. On appeal the Assistant Judge held that the mortgage of A.D. 1818 was genuine, but he agreed with the Subordinate Judge in regarding the rajinama as a fresh alienation of vatani property, and therefore invalid as against the plaintiff, having been executed since the passing of Regulation XVI of 1827, s. 20. He therefore affirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge. The defendant thereupon filed a special appeal in the High Court, which, on the 29th September 1875, reversed the decrees of the Courts below, holding that the rajinama was not a fresh alienation of vatani lands, but a compromise of a dispute in regard to an alienation by way of mortgage in A.D. 1818 of vatani lands, and that the rajinama was therefore valid, and ought to be enforced, and was not affected by Regulation XVI of 1827, s. 20. Previously to this decree of the High Court, the plaintiff had applied for execution of the Subordinate Judge's decree, and had been put into possession of the mortgaged property on the 9th June 1873. The decrees of the lower Courts being thus reversed by the High Court, the defendant in 1876 presented a petition to the Subordinate Judge, praying a restoration of the mortgaged property to his possession. The plaintiff did not oppose his application, but the Subordinate Judge refused it on the ground that he had received a certificate from the Collector, issued under s. 10 of Bombay Act III of 1874, stating that the property, the subject of the application, formed part of a vatan. On appeal, the Assistant Judge affirmed the order of the Subordinate Judge, being of opinion that the receipt of the certificate by the Subordinate Judge compelled him to refrain from giving effect to the decree of the High Court. Thereupon the defendant filed a special appeal in the High Court. Held that the certificate of the Collector was unlawfully issued, and that the Subordinate Judge should proceed to give effect to the decree of the High Court of the 29th September 1875 by re-instating the defendant in possession of the premises mentioned in the rajinama. The certificate which the Collector is authorized to issue under s. 10 of Bombay Act III of 1874 should be sent to the Court by whose decree or order the vatan is affected, in the manner mentioned in the section. The Collector's certificate in this case, therefore, had not been issued to the proper Court. The restitution of the mortgaged property to the defendant in whose possession it was at the commencement of this suit in 1872, and until the execution of the erroneous decree of the Court of first instance in 1873, was not such a passing into the ownership or beneficial possession of any person not a vatandar of the same vatan as is meant by s. 10 of Bombay Act III of 1874. The alienation of the vatani property to Rudrapa having in 1831 received the sanction of the authorized officer of Government, s. 10 of Bombay Act III of 1874 did not apply,—the intention of the Act being that, whenever the alienation of an hereditary officer's vatan has received the sanction of Government, the Collector should not issue his certificate. The words "without the sanction of Government" in s. 10 of the Act qualify the whole section. Bombay Act III of 1874 does not authorize the Collector to issue his certificate for the purpose of preventing the rectification of a subordinate Court's decree by the High Court or the re-instatement of a person in possession of which he has been deprived by the execution of the erroneous decree of a subordinate Court. RACHANA v. AMINGOVDA . I. L. R., 5 Bom., 268

4. ————— *Execution of decrees—Transfer of vatan property from one not vatandar—Collector's certificate prohibiting delivery of decreed property—Procedure.*—The plaintiff and his brother, who were vatandar dehbandas, sued to redeem a certain property alleged to have been mortgaged by their undivided paternal aunt to the defendant. The defendant objected on the ground that the plaintiffs were not the heirs of the widow, who had left a daughter. The daughter was joined as co-plaintiff, and a decree passed in her favour, and that decree was confirmed by the Special Judge. The plaintiffs, being dissatisfied with this decision, applied to the Collector for the issue of a certificate, under s. 10 of Act III of 1874, prohibiting the property from passing out of the family. The daughter in the meanwhile obtained possession of the property under the decree. Subsequently the certificate applied for by the plaintiffs was filed by them. The lower Court, feeling doubt as to whether the Collector could legally issue the certificate and how far it would operate, referred the case to the High Court. Held that the Court should not act upon the certificate of the Collector. The effect of the decree being to transfer the property from the mortgagee, who was not a vatandar, to the daughter, who, according to the Collector's certificate, was also not one, s. 10 of Act III of 1874 had no application. The Collector, if he thought proper,

The Collector referred the matter to his subordinates for inquiry, and the certificate was not issued until the 13th March 1890, that is, more than twelve years after the death of the last holder N. Held that, although more than twelve years had elapsed, the Court could not refuse to act on the certificate of the Collector, as provided by s. 10 of the Vatan Act. CHANDRA NAIK v. BAHINARAI . If in obtaining this right he is restored to possession of vatan land, such a restoration does not fall within the scope of s. 10, Bombay Act III of 1874. Rachaps v. Amingonda, I. L. 9. ————— and ss. 25 and 56 — Representative vatandar—Attachment—Jurisdiction of Revenue and Civil Courts—Res judicata.—A decree of the District Court at Solapur, made in 1863, declared the plaintiff to be an hereditary deputy vatandar of a certain deshpande vatan vested in the defendants as hereditary vatandars, and as such deputy entitled to receive a certain sum annually out of the income of the vatan. The plaintiff received moneys from time to time under his decrees. He was not, however, subsequently to the decree, registered and treated as "a representative vatandar" under Bombay Act III of 1874, s. 56. In 1875 plaintiff made a darkhast for the attachment of a certain amount belonging to the vatan for arrears due to him under his decree. The money was accordingly attached. Subsequently the Collector issued a certificate to the Subordinate Judge, who had attached it for the removal of the attachment under Bombay Act III of 1874, s. 10. The Subordinate Judge accordingly ordered it to be removed, and his order was affirmed by the Assistant Judge on appeal. The plaintiff thereupon preferred a special appeal to the High Court. Held that the lower Courts had no option but to raise the attachment on receiving the Collector's certificate. Held also that, as the plaintiff having, according to law as it stood in 1863, succeeded in then establishing his right to be an hereditary deputy deshpande, he was entitled to the benefit of s. 56 of Bombay Act III of 1874. His status as hereditary deputy vatandar was a fact which neither a Revenue nor a Civil Court could properly ignore or re-open. It was res judicata. GOPAL HANMANT GUMASTE v. SAKHARAM GOVIND

s. 13—Hereditary service vatan—Office of kazi—Rozina allowance, its liability to attachment and sale in execution of a decree—Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871), s. 4.—The office of kazi is not a hereditary service vatan under Bombay Act III of 1874. Plaintiff obtained a money-decree against H, and in execution sought to attach and sell a decree obtained by H against M, which entitled H to receive annually a certain portion of the rozina allowance paid by Government to M as kazi. H contended that the rozina allowance was paid to M and his family for service as kazi, and that therefore it was not liable to the process of a Civil Court under s. 13 of Bombay Act III of 1874. This contention was upheld by both the lower Courts. Held that, as the kazi's office was not a hereditary service vatan, plaintiff's rights to attach the decrees obtained by H against M was not barred by s. 13 of Bombay Act III of 1874. Held also that, as H was not liable to serve as kazi, it was not open to him to urge that the allowance in question was appropriated as service remuneration, and was not therefore transferable. Held also that, as the decree sought to be attached was passed before the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871) came into force, plaintiff's darkhast was not barred for want of a certificate under s. 4 of the Act. DHARAMDAS SAMBHUDAS v. — s. 17—Vatam—Collector's power to determine the amount of payments of a fluctuating character—Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act (X of 1876), s. 4, cl. (c)—Right of suit—Jurisdiction of Revenue Court—Jurisdiction of Civil Court.—The payments referred to in s. 17 of Bombay Act III of 1874 are those mentioned in s. 4, namely, "customary fees or perquisites in money or in kind, whether at fixed times or otherwise." It is the commutation of these customary and fluctuating payments that is provided for by ss. 17–21. But the Collector has no power under s. 17 to impose new burdens on the landowner in cases where, the payment being constant already, there is nothing to determine. Plaintiff was the inamdar of a certain village. Defendant No. 3 was the vatandar kulkarni of the village. He enjoyed for the performance of his duties some inam lands and a cash allowance of Rs5 paid annually by the inamdar. In 1884, defendant No. 3 having failed to perform the service in person or by deputy, the Collector appointed defendant No. 2 to act as kulkarni. Defendant No. 2 officiated from 20th November 1884 to 4th December 1888. On the application of defendant No. 2, the Collector increased his remuneration according to the scale fixed for Government villages known as the Wingate scale, and ordered plaintiff to pay the increased remuneration, so as to make up the amount due under that scale. On 26th September 1890, the Collector recovered the sum of Rs171 from the plaintiff by attachment of his property. The plaintiff thereupon sued the Secretary of State for India in Council to recover this amount as being illegally levied. The defendant pleaded that the Collector, having determined the amount of defendant No. 2's remuneration under s. 17 of Bombay Act III of 1874, the plaintiff had no cause of action against him, and that the suit was barred under s. 4, cl. 3, of Act X of 1876. Held that, as the cash payment made by the plaintiff to the vatandar was certain, and not of a fluctuating or indeterminate character, the Collector had no power to increase the remuneration of the officiator under s. 17 of Bombay Act III of 1874. Held also that the suit was not barred by s. 4 (c) of Act X of 1876. ANANTACHARYA v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA. I. L. R., 19 Bom., 581

Justices of the Peace for the State of Mysore are also Justices of the Peace for Bangalore, and both the Civil and Sessions Judge and the District Magistrate of Bangalore, being such Justices of the Peace, are, by virtue of s. 6 of the said Act, subordinate to the High Court at Madras. The High Court, therefore, has jurisdiction to order the transfer of a criminal case from the Court of the District Magistrate of the Civil and Military Station of Bangalore to the Court of a Presidency Magistrate at Madras. IN RE HAYES

24. — Suit to declare an infant marriage null and void—Parsi Matrimonial Court—Act XV of 1865, ss. 3, 30—Letters Patent, s. 12.—In 1868 the plaintiff and defendant, then of the ages of seven and six years, respectively, went through the ceremony of marriage in the presence of their respective parents and according to the rites of their religion. The formal consent on behalf of the plaintiff was not given by his father, but by his uncle with whom he was living and by whom he had been adopted. Nineteen years afterwards the plaintiff filed this suit praying for a declaration that the pretended marriage was null and void, and did not create the status of husband and wife between the plaintiff and defendant. The defendant resisted the suit, and claimed to be the lawful wife of the plaintiff. The plaintiff and defendant never lived together as man and wife, nor was the marriage ever consummated. Held that, such a suit not being in the category of suits relegated to a special Court by Act XV of 1865, the jurisdiction to try it remained in the High Court, to which it had been given by s. 12 of the Letters Patent. PURSHOTAM HORMASJI DUSTOOR v. MEHAR BAI I. L. R., 13 Bom., 302

25. — Suit by the husband for divorce—Parsi Marriage Act (XV of 1865), ss. 3, 30—British India—Valid marriage out of British India—Marriage when husband is a minor—Previous consent of guardian.—The plaintiff and defendant were Parsis. The husband filed this suit in April 1891, stating that in March 1885 he and the defendant went through the ceremony of ashirvad at Akola in the Berar Assigned Districts. He alleged that he was at the time only nineteen years of age, and that his mother and guardian had not given her previous consent to the ceremony, nor was she present at it. He and the defendant subsequently cohabited at Bhuseval until the 8th April 1885, but since then he had not lived with the defendant. He further alleged that the defendant had been guilty of adultery, and he prayed that, if necessary, it might be declared that the ashirvad ceremony did not constitute a valid marriage, but that, if the marriage should be declared valid, it might be dissolved. At the hearing it was found that the requirements of s. 3 of the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act (XV of 1865) were complied with at the marriage. So that the marriage would have been valid if it had been celebrated within British India. It was also found that the defendant had been guilty of adultery. Held that the jurisdiction of the Court was not barred merely by the circumstance that the parties were married at Akola. S. 30 of the Act, 1865, applies to marriages wherever celebrated. In the present case, both the parties were domiciled within the territorial jurisdiction at the time of the marriage, and were still so domiciled, and the adultery was also committed within the jurisdiction. The Court therefore had jurisdiction. The delegates having found that at the marriage the requirements of s. 3 of the Parsi Marriage Act (XV of 1865) were complied with, —Held, assuming that there was no special law or usage in the Berar on the subject as to the requisites of a valid marriage between Parsis in that district, or that, if there was such law or usage, it was in accordance with s. 3 of the Act, the marriage between the plaintiff and the defendant was valid and capable of being dissolved. DORABJI RUSTOMJI MADON v. The High Court, by an order under s. 526 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), transferred the present case of defamation from the Court of the Cantonment Magistrate at Secunderabad to the High Court for trial, on the ground that no machinery for a trial by jury existed at Secunderabad. *QUEEN-EMPERESS v. 28 & 29 Vict., c. 17, preamble—22 & 23 Vict., c. 96, s. 1—Construction of statutes.—Act XVII of 1886 (Jhansi and Morar Act) is not ultra vires of the Governor General in Council, and the town and fort of Jhansi are subject to the jurisdiction of the High Court for the N.-W. Provinces in the same manner as the rest of the Jhansi District. The Governor General in Council has power to make laws and regulations binding on all persons within the Indian territories under the dominion of Her Majesty, no matter when such territories were acquired. His legislative powers are not limited to those territories which, at the date when the Indian Councils Act (24 & 25 Vict., c. 67) received the royal assent (i.e., the 1st August 1861), were under the dominion of Her Majesty. In the preamble to the 28 & 29 Vict., c. 17, and in s. 1 of the 22 & 23 Vict., c. 96, Parliament has placed this construction upon s. 22 of the Indian Councils Act. Even if that construction was erroneous, it has been so declared by Parliament as to make its adoption obligatory. 1. AUTHORITIES ON LAW OF ADOPTION.

1. ——— Authorities on Hindu law.—Dattaka Mimamsa-Kalika Purana.—In dealing with questions of the Hindu law of adoption, it is unsafe to resort to analogical arguments derived from the arrogatio or the adoptio of the Roman civil law, and where it is necessary to recur to first principles, they should be sought for in the approved authorities of the Hindu law itself, and not in foreign systems of law. Collector of Masulipatam v. Caraly Venkata Narainapah, 8 Moore's I. A., 529; Bhyah Bam Singh v. Bhyah Uyar Singh, 18 Moore's I. A., 373; and Ramalakshmi Ammal v. Siranantika Perumal Sethurayar, 14 Moore's I. A., 570, referred to. The dictum of the Lords of the Privy Council in The Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga Sathupathy, 19 Moore's I. A., 897, that the duty of European Judges administering the Hindu law is not so much to inquire whether a disputed doctrine is deducible from the earliest authorities as to ascertain whether it has been received by the particular school governing the district concerned, and has there been sanctioned by usage, does not prohibit the Court from considering the question of fact whether a particular passage of the Kalika Purana upon which an argument in the Dattaka Mimamsa is based is authentic by reference to other authoritative works of Hindu law. In that case no inflexible rule was laid down assigning supreme and infallible authority to the Dattaka Mimamsa in questions connected with the law of adoption as followed by the Benares school of Hindu law. The authenticity of the text of the Kalika Purana, which lays down that a child must not be adopted whose age exceeds five years, is extremely doubtful. The interpretation given to that text in the Dattaka Mimamsa was not necessarily intended to be universally applicable, and admits of a construction which would confine the application of the text to Brahmans intended for the priesthood; and various other equally plausible interpretations have been adopted by other authorities. This being so, it would be unsafe to act upon the text in question and upon the interpretation placed upon it in the Dattaka Mimamsa so as to set aside an adoption which took place many years ago, which had ever since been recognized as valid, and under which the adoptee had ever since been in possession of his adoptive father's estate upon the single ground that at the time of the adoption the adopted son was more than five years of age. According to the Kalika Purana as interpreted by the Dattaka Mimamsa of Nanda Pandita, an adoption in the Dattaka form is wholly null and void if made after the adoptee has completed the fifth year of his age. It is a mistake to hold that, according to the Dattaka Mimamsa, so long as an adoption takes place while the adoptee is under six years of age, it is valid. The mistake arises from supposing that the word "panchvarshiya" used in paragraphs 48 and 53 of the Dattaka Mimamsa necessarily indicates that the person referred to has passed the fifth anniversary of his birth. It indicates, on the contrary, that he is in his fifth year. Thakoor Oomrao Singh v. Thakooraness Mehtab Koonver, 1 N. W., 103a, discredited from. GANGA SAHAI v. LEEHRAJ SINGH. I. L. 12. — Widow's capacity to adopt.—Implied prohibition.—Adoption by senior widow.—In the absence of express prohibition, the husband's consent to an adoption by his widow is always to be implied. The question of implied prohibition is one of legal inference from the facts found, and it is open to the Court to inquire into its correctness in second appeal. Semble—In the Bombay Presidency the widow's right to adopt is inherent, and not merely delegated. Semble—In the absence of express prohibition by the husband, the widow's power to give or take in adoption is co-extensive with that of the husband. LAKSHMINAI v. widow, has been really obtained. RADHAMADHUR GOSSAIN v. RADHABULLUB GOSSAIN

[2 Ind. Jur., O. R., 5; 1 Kay, 311]

16. — Presumption of consent.—Acts of adoptive mother.—When a Hindu lady adopted a son in the lifetime of her husband, the fact that she carried on a law-suit during his lifetime, calling herself his wife and the mother of the adopted son, and that neither the husband nor any one else denied the adoption, would be strong corroborative evidence that the adoption was made not only with the husband's consent, but that the ceremonies usual on the occasion of an adoption were done in his actual presence. TINCOWRI CHATTERJI v. DEBONATH BANERJEE . . . W. R., 1864, 155

17. — Proof of authority to adopt.—Adoption by widow to deceased husband.—Proof of.—In an adoption made by a Hindu widow, under authority conferred upon her for that purpose by her husband, the authority must be strictly proved, and as the adoption is for the husband's benefit, the child must be adopted to him, and not to the widow alone. An adoption by the widow alone would not, for purposes of Hindu law, give the adopted child, even after her death, any right to property inherited by her from her husband. Held in the present case that the evidence did not support the contention that the adopted son of the widow had been adopted to the husband. CHOWDERY PADAM SINGH v. 21. ——— Power to adopt—Validity of power to widow and executors to adopt—Exercise of such power by widow with consent of the surviving executor.—A testator by his will authorized and empowered his wife to adopt a son in the following words: "I hereby authorize and empower my wife and executrix, and my executors and trustees, to whom I give full permission and liberty, to adopt after my decease a son, and in case of his death during his minority, or on attaining his full age, and without leaving male issue, to adopt a second son, and in case of his death during minority or on attaining such age and without leaving male issue, to adopt a third son, and no more, etc." Held the power of adoption was valid. The testator associated the other executors with his wife for the purpose of insuring a wise exercise of her discretion in the selection of a son for adoption, and not with the intention of making it an essential condition of adoption that they should take a part in the ceremony of adoption from which, under the Hindu law, they were precluded. Held also the power was given to the executors qua executors, and therefore survived to the holders for the time being of the office of executors; the death of one of them before the power was exercised did not therefore render the power void. The power was validly exercised by the wife adopting with the consent of the surviving executor. The mere fact of the surviving executor not having actually and physically taken in adoption was not a failure to comply with the terms of the power. AMRITO LAL DUTT v. SURNOMONY DASSEE . . . I. L. R., 24 Cal., 589
[C. W. N., 845]

Held on appeal that such power was bad. Under Hindu law, power to adopt can be given to a widow only, and she has no capacity to adopt save under the express permission of her husband given in his lifetime. AMRITO LAL DUTT v. SURNOMONY DAS

2 C. W. N., 889]

Held by the Privy Council:—That no one except the widow, authorized for the purpose by her husband, can adopt a son to him after his decease is a principle in the Hindu law of adoption. The power is exercisable by the widow alone, though restriction may be placed upon her choice of a boy by the husband's having made it a condition that persons named by him should concur in the choice. Held therefore that by this will no valid authority to adopt was given to the widow. The conjecture that the testator really meant to give authority to the widow to adopt, restricting her power merely to the extent that there should be others, his executors, who were to consent to the choice of a boy to be adopted by her, could not be accepted as a legitimate construction of the will. The authority was expressed in clear terms to be to the three. It would also be beyond the range of judicial interpretation to construe the will as meaning that the testator only intended to provide for the appointment of a male successor to him in the property. AMRITO LAL DUTT v. SURNOMONY DAS

22. ——— Specifying a child for adoption who dies or is refused—Continuation of authority to adopt another person.—Where a husband authorizing an adoption specifies the child he wishes to be taken, but that child dies or is refused by his parents, the authority given warrants (at least in Bombay) the adoption of another child. The presumption is that the husband desired an adoption, and by specifying the object merely indicated a preference. LAKSHMINARAYAN v. RAJANI

(c) CEREMONIES.

24. ——— Ceremony of putressee jag—Consent of person adopted—Superior castes.—The performance of the putressee jag is essential to the validity of an adoption in the Dattaka form, at least among the three superior castes. The consent of the party adopted is essential to the validity of an adoption in the Kritrima form. LUCHMUN LALL v. MOHUN LALL BHAYA GAYAL . . . 16 W. R., 179

25. ——— Ceremony of datta homam—Brahmans.—Semle.—The ceremony of datta homam is among Brahmans an essential element in adoption. Singamma v. Vinjamuri Venkatachari, 4 Mad., 165, questioned. VENKATA v. SURENDRA . . . I. L. R., 7 Mad., 548

26. ——— Brahman—Giving and receiving child.—In order to establish a valid adoption in a Brahman family, proof of the performance of the datta homam is not essential. The giving and receiving a boy who is capable of being adopted is sufficient to constitute a valid adoption according to Hindu law. SINGAMMA v. VINJAMURI VENKATACHARI . . . 4 Mad., 165

27. ——— Dakhani Brahman.—In the case of Dakhani Brahman, the "datta homam" or any other religious ceremony is not required to give validity to the adoption of a brother's son: the giving and taking of the child is sufficient for that purpose. ATMARAM v. MADHO RAO

33. ————— Upanayana, Ceremony of—Second birth—Age of adoptee.—As understood in the Hindu law, adoption is itself a "second birth" proceeding upon the fiction of law that the adoptee is "born again" into the adoptive family. The existence of male issue being favoured mainly for the sake of the parent's beatitude in the future life, adoption is a sacrament justified under certain conditions when the natural male offspring is wanting. It is effected by a substantial adherence to ceremonies, but principally by the acts of giving and taking. Having taken place, its effect is the affiliation of the adoptee as if he had been begotten by his adoptive father, thus removing him from his natural into his adoptive family. In this manner, he is "born again" into the adoptive family by the rites of initiation. According to Manu, in the case of the three "twice-born" classes the turning point of the "second birth," which means purification from the sin inherent in human nature, is represented by the ceremony of upanayana or investiture of the sacred thread hallowed by the gayatri, and until the performance of this ceremony, the person concerned, though born of twice-born parents, remains on the same level as a Sudra. The ceremony is, moreover, the beginning of his education in the duties of his tribe, as prescribed by Manu. According to the Hindu law, as observed by the Benares school, the ceremony of upanayana, representing as it does the second birth of a boy and the beginning of his education in the duties of his tribe, is also the ultimate limit of time when a valid adoption in the dattaka form can take place. Adoption in that form implies that the second birth has taken place in the adoptive family; and it cannot be effected after the boy's place in his natural family has become irrevocably fixed by the upanayana representing his second birth therein. The age of the boy is material only as determining the term at which the upanayana may be performed. Kerutnarain v. Bhobunessore, 1 Sel. Rep., 161, and *Ramkishore Achary Chowdree v. 36. ————— Necessity for ceremonies.—A Hindu Sudra adopted the plaintiff, his brother's son, in 1247 (1840), who, upon the death of his adoptive father, performed his sraddh and obtained possession of all his property as such adopted son. The adoption had not been questioned except in 1256 (1849), when the defendant sued the plaintiff, who was then still a minor, through his guardian, and obtained possession from the plaintiff of certain of the property of the deceased, on the ground that the adoption was invalid. The plaintiff now, within twelve years of such dispossession, sued to recover possession stating that the decree in the former suit had been obtained by the defendant in collusion with the guardian. The defence was, that the adoption was invalid, the proper ceremonies not having been performed. The Court refused to entertain such defence. Per BATLEY, J.—Ceremonies which are necessary to be observed for a valid adoption among Hindus of the superior classes are not necessary in the case of an adoption by a Sudra. In the case of adoption by a Sudra of a brother's son, mere giving and taking may be sufficient to make the adoption valid. NITTANUND GHOSH v. KRISHNA DOYAL GHOSH. 7 B. L. R., 1: 15 W. R., 300

"And as I am desirous of adopting a son, I declare that I have adopted K, third son of my eldest brother. My wives shall perform the ceremonies according to the Shastras and bring him up, and until that adopted son comes of age, those executors shall look after and superintend all the property, moveable and immoveable, in my own name or benami, left my me, also that adopted son. When he comes to maturity, the executors shall make over everything to him to his satisfaction."....."God forbid, but should this adopted son die, and my younger brother Nilrutton have more than one son, then my wives shall adopt a son of his. If at that time Nilrutton has not a son eligible to adoption, they shall adopt another son of Saroda, and the wives and executors shall perform all the aforementioned acts." In a suit by one of G's widows as heir of her husband to set aside his will and recover half his property, it appeared that the above-mentioned ceremonies had been performed by one widow only. Held that according to the true construction of the will (which was established by the evidence) there was a gift of his property by the testator to a designated person independently of the performances of the ceremonies. Quere—Whether the performance of the ceremonies was essential to the completeness of the adoption; and if so, whether one widow was effectually empowered to perform them. NIDHOO-MONI DEBYA v. 53. ———— Adoption among Jains—Deed of adoption, Validity of—Authority of widow.—A B, a member of the community of Jains of Marvadi origin, who form part of the inhabitants of Ahmadnagar in the Deccan, died without leaving natural born issue and without adopting any child. His wife, who survived him, resolved shortly before her death on adopting the son of C D, a brother of A B, but did not live to carry her intention into effect. After her death, C D and E F (another brother of A B), with the assent of the Panch or senior members of their community, went through a ceremony of giving the boy in adoption to the deceased A B and his deceased wife, and an instrument of agreement wholly founded upon that adoption was executed by E F to C D, and affected to deal with the property, moveable and immovable, of A B. Held that the adoption was invalid, and that the instrument of agreement fell together with it. Adoption among Jains is, in the Presidency of Bombay, regulated by the ordinary Hindu law, as is their succession to property generally, notwithstanding their divergence from Hindus in matters of religion; and Hindu law does not allow any one but the widow to act vicariously for the man to whom the son is to be affiliated; the widow is a delegate either with express or implied authority, and cannot extend that authority to another person, so as to enable him to adopt a son to her husband after her decease; not only a giving, but an acceptance by the man or his wife or widow, manifested by some overt act, being necessary to constitute an adoption by Hindu law. BHAGVANDAS TEJMAL v. RAGMAL alias HIRALAL LACHMI-ANDAS 10 Bom., 241

54. ———— Death of only son leaving widows in lifetime of father—Subsequent death of father—Vesting of father's estate in son's widows—Adoption by son's senior widow without consent of junior widow—Divesting of estate.—By custom the Jains are governed in matters of adoption by the ordinary rules of Hindu law. Where an only son has died in his father's lifetime leaving a widow, an adoption by her after the father's death, and after she has inherited the estate, is valid. Where the son has left two widows, an adoption by the senior widow after the father's death is valid, although the younger widow does not consent and although such adoption divests the estate which she has inherited from her father-in-law. The authority of a widow to adopt is at an end when the estate, after being vested in her son, has passed to the son's widow. An adoption by a widow in a divided family cannot divest any estate other than her own and her co-widow's except, perhaps, with the consent of the heir in whom the estate has vested. AMAYA v. 64. Adoption during wife's pregnancy—Posthumous son, Rights of, in family property—Will limiting legal share of such son.—The adoption of a son by a childless Hindu is valid, although at the time of adoption his wife is pregnant. The possibility that a son may afterwards be born to him does not invalidate the adoption. A posthumous son takes the family property by right of survivorship, on the principle of relation back to the time of the father's death, which applies in the analogous case of inheritance and partition, and the rights of such a son stand on the same footing as those of a son in esse at the time of the father's death. A father therefore can no more interfere by his will with the right of a posthumous son to his share of the family property as fixed by law than with the right of a son in esse at the time of his death. An adopted son stands in the position of a natural son, subject to having his share reduced to one-fourth in the event of a natural son being subsequently born. R died, leaving him surviving his widow, who was then pregnant, and the defendant, whom he had adopted, a few days before his death. By his will R directed that, in the event of a son being born to him after his death, his property should be divided equally between such son and the defendant, but otherwise all his property was to go to the defendant. Shortly after R's death, a son (the plaintiff) was born. The present suit was brought by the guardian of the plaintiff to recover the family property from the defendant. It was contended that the adoption of the defendant was invalid, having taken place during the pregnancy of the plaintiff's mother, and R's will, in so far as it was in prejudice of the plaintiff's right as a son, was also invalid. Held that the adoption of the defendant by R was valid, notwithstanding that R's wife was pregnant at the time of the adoption. Held also that R's will was inoperative in so far as it reduced the plaintiff's share to a moiety of the property. On the birth of the plaintiff, the defendant, as the adopted son, became by Hindu law entitled only to one-fourth, the plaintiff, as the natural son, taking the other three-fourths. HANMANT RANCHANDRA v. BHIMACHARYA. (I. L. R., 12 Bom., 106)

65. Vaishya who has undergone the ceremony of Vibhut Vida—Custom as to incapability to adopt.—There is nothing in the books of authority amongst Hindus to show that a Vaishya who has undergone the ceremony of Vibhut Vida is incapable of adopting a son. also because it was made when the adopter was under pollution in consequence of the death of a relative. Upon a conflict of evidence as to the time of the relative's death, the Privy Council decided in favour of the respondent. The period of pollution, according to Hindu law, is sixteen days. BAMALINGA PILLAI v. BUDANIYA PILLAI . . . 1 W. R., P. C., 25

68. ———— Widow whose husband's corpse has not been removed—Adoption during pollution of adoptive parent—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 15, 16—Coercion—Undue influence.—The minor widow of a deceased Hindu of the Komati or Vaisya caste (who had authorized her to adopt a son) corporately accepted a boy as in adoption from his natural father, who (semble) belonged to a different gotra from her deceased husband. There were no formal declarations of giving and taking the child, and datta homam was not performed. At the time when the child was handed over to the widow, her husband's corpse was still in the house, and the relatives of the child and other members of the caste obstructed the removal of the corpse until the child had been accepted as above and the widow had executed a deed of adoption. Held that there was no valid adoption by the widow. Per Cur.—Obstructing the removal of a corpse by the deceased widow or her guardian unless she made an adoption and signed a document is an unlawful act, and amounts to "coercion" and "undue influence," such as are defined by s. 15 or 16 of the Contract Act. *Dicta in Shoenath Ghose v. 69. ———— Adoptive mother under pollution—Adoptive mother of same gotram as natural father—Subsequent datta homam—Absence of natural father at datta homam—Validity of adoption—Estoppel.—In a suit to recover possession of certain land to which the plaintiff claimed title as the adopted son of a deceased Saraswati Brahman, it appeared that he had been taken in adoption by the widow of the deceased acting on the authority of her late husband that datta homam was performed subsequently, and that the plaintiff had since been recognized as the adoptive son of the deceased and had acted accordingly during a period of twenty-five years. The defendant was in possession under a claim of title as a reversionary heir, the widow having died shortly before suit. It appeared further (1) that the widow was under pollution at the time of the plaintiff's adoption, but the pollution had ceased at the time of the datta homam; (2) that the natural father was not present at the time of the datta homam, but his wife took part in the ceremony with his consent. Semble—Neither of the last-mentioned circumstances invalidated the adoption, but quære—whether the adoption was not invalid for the reason that the plaintiff's adoptive mother was

71. ———— Unchastity of widow after vesting of estate, Effect of, on power of adoption—Suit to set aside adoption.—One G died, leaving him surviving his widow Y and his undivided son R, who subsequently also died, leaving him surviving his widow P and a son V, who died shortly afterwards. Y adopted the plaintiff, and immediately afterwards P adopted the defendant. The plaintiff sought to set aside the adoption of the defendant, alleging that it was invalid, inasmuch as it took place subsequently to his own adoption, and because of P being an unchaste widow. The Court of first instance rejected the plaintiff's suit, holding his adoption invalid. The lower Appellate Court reversed the decree of the Court of first instance, and remanded the suit for re-trial. From this order of remand the defendant appealed. On appeal to the High Court.—Held that the adoption of the plaintiff was invalid. After the death of R, his estate vested in his widow P, the adoptive mother of the defendant. Her existence and the vesting in her of her husband's estate rendered the elder widow Y incapable of adopting. The estate, having thus vested in P, would not be divested by her subsequent unchastity, and therefore the inquiry into her chastity was irrelevant. KISHAY RAMRISHNA v. GOVIND GUNESH
[I. L. R., 9 Bom., 94]

72. ———— Untonsured widow—Validity of adoption—Conflicting opinions of Shastris as to validity of adoption.—In a suit to uphold the validity of an adoption made by the defendant of the plaintiff, the defendant admitted that she had performed certain ceremonies which she intended to be an adoption of the plaintiff as son of V; but she alleged that at the time of the said adoption she had not, nor had she since, undergone tonsure; and that, according to the custom of the Daivadnya community, to which she and the plaintiff belonged, a widow could not adopt until her head had undergone tonsure. She also stated that the majority of her caste had declared the said adoption to be invalid, and she submitted the question as to its validity to the Court. Held that the adoption of the plaintiff was a valid adoption. From the evidence it appeared that the requisite religious ceremonies had been performed. Before the defendant took part in them, Shastris were consulted as to whether the defendant, while untensured, could properly do so, and on making certain expiatory gifts she was pronounced competent. Under such circumstances, the Court could not hold her to be incompetent. Even if other Shastris were of a different opinion, a Civil Court could not decide between conflicting opinions upon such a question of ecclesiastical etiquette. If an adoption be performed with all requisite rites, with the assistance of priests and in accordance with the opinions of Shastris, the Court will uphold it, even against the opinions of other Shastris expressing or entertaining contrary views. RAYJI VINAYAKRAY JAGANNATH SHANKARSETT v. LAKSHMINIBAI I. L. R., 11 Bom., 381

73. — Delegation of authority to adopt—Ceremony of adoption.—Under the Hindu law, the widow only can adopt a son to her husband, and she cannot delegate this authority to any other relation. Where a widow performs the principal part of the adoption ceremony—namely, the gift and acceptance,—the fact that at her request the religious part of the ceremony is completed by a relation does not vitiate the adoption. In the case of a young widow, the fact that she was untoussured at the time of the adoption is not such a disqualification as vitiates the adoption. LAKSHMINIBAI v. RAMCHANDRA I. L. R., 22 Bom., 590

74. — Rights of adoption of elder widow—Adoption by younger widow without consent of elder widow invalid, although child selected by both widows—Right of selection.—An adoption by a younger widow, without the consent of the eldest widow, of a boy who has previously been selected by all the widows for adoption cannot be supported against the wish of the eldest widow. A younger widow cannot adopt without the consent of the elder. Held that the right of the elder widow was not merely a right of selection. Adoption, of course, implies selection of the child, but there is not complete adoption until the mutual acts of giving and receiving the child are accomplished, and until they take place, there is necessarily a locus penitentiae for the elder widow of which she may avail herself, although contrary to the wishes of the other widows, by changing her mind and selecting another child. To hold that any one of the junior widows might perform the formal act of adoption of the selected child whenever it pleased her would be tantamount to enabling her to force the hand of the elder widow and compel her to complete the adoption which, at the most, was only in fieri. B died in 1865 without a son, leaving three widows, viz., L, A, and C, of whom L was the eldest and C the youngest. The plaintiff was unanimously selected by the three widows for adoption after the death of their husband. The unanimity continued down to May 1868; but on the 30th June 1868 L declared that, if the plaintiff were adopted by C, she would not consent to it. On the 1st July 1868, C adopted the plaintiff without the consent of L. On the 12th August 1869, L adopted the defendant. On the 10th August 1891, the plaintiff filed this suit against the defendant, alleging himself to be B's adopted son and as such claiming possession of B's property. He did not deny the factum of the defendant's alleged adoption on the 12th August 1869, which constituted (the plaintiff alleged) his cause of action. The defendant contended that he himself was the adopted son of B, having been adopted by L, the senior widow. He insisted that the plaintiff's adoption was invalid, having been carried out without the consent of L, the senior widow. He further contended that the plaintiff's claim to the property was barred by limitation, it having been in possession of himself (the defendant) and L for more than twelve years before this suit was filed. Held that the plaintiff was not the rightfully adopted son of B, and therefore was not entitled to the property in dispute. His adoption by C, the younger widow, without the consent of L, the senior widow, was invalid. PADAJIRAY v. RAMRAY

77. — Adoption with consent of father, but ceremonies performed by deputy—Validity of adoption.—Where the father of a boy gave his formal consent to the adoption of his son, but was prevented by sickness from attending the adoption ceremony, and delegated to his brother the duty of making the presentation, it was held that the adoption was nevertheless valid. JAMNABAI v. HINDU LAW—ADOPTION—continued.8. WHO MAY OR MAY NOT ADOPT—continued.

of the brother having aurasa (self-begotten) issue, and should not be alienated from the line of the latter by adoption. Held that this contract did not bind the son not to adopt, or exclude from the inheritance a son adopted by him. Such a stipulation was contrary to the law declared in the Tugore case, 9 B. L. R., 877, and was ineffectual to prevent the son's exercising his right of adoption. SURIYA RAO v. RAJA OF PITTAPUR. 80. — Adoption by wife—Sanction to wife to adopt in husband's lifetime.—According to the highest authorities in repute in the Maratha country, the express sanction of the husband is indispensable to render valid an adoption made by the wife in his lifetime. Comparative weight, as legal authorities on this side of India on the question of adoption, of the Mitakshara, Mayukha, Dattaka Munasa, Dattaka Chandrika, Smriti Chandrika, Viramitrodaya, Dharmasindhu, and the Nirnayasinidhu pointed out. Dictum in the case of Collector of Madura v. M. Ramalinga Sathapathi, 2 Mad., 220, "that the opinion of Devanda Bhatta must have been that the assent of the husband stood upon precisely the same footing, and was of the same scope, in the cases of giving and receiving" (by the wife in adoption) questioned. *NARAYAN BABJI v. 81. — Power of wife to give in adoption—Consent of Government to adoption—Non-fulfilment of conditions of adoption—Mistake.—According to the Hindu law prevailing in the Bombay Presidency, a wife is not competent to give her son in adoption against the will, express or implied, of her husband, the father of that son, or under circumstances from which the husband's dissent can be inferred. *RANGUBAI v. husband if she has been expressly prohibited from doing so by her husband in his lifetime. Quere whether, according to the Maratha school, she can adopt without the authority of her husband given prior to his decease. Where a Hindu childless husband, when at the point of death, positively refused to adopt a son, and died without retracting that refusal, it was held that a subsequent adoption by his widow was null and void, as authority from her husband to adopt could not in such a case be implied (per WESTROFF, J.). Dictum of the High Court of Madras, "that the opinion of Devanda Bhatta must have been that the assent of the husband stood upon the same footing, and was of the scope, in the case of giving and receiving" (a son in adoption by the wife) questioned. Where an adoption by a young Hindu widow set up against her and to defeat her rights, the Court will expect clear evidence that at the time she adopted she was fully informed of those rights, and of the effect of the act of adoption upon them; and if it find that fraud or cajolery was practised upon the widow to induce her to adopt, or that there has been suppression or concealment of facts from her, it will refuse to uphold the adoption. BAYABAI v. BALAURI VENKATRAH RAMA KANT. 7 Bom., Ap., 1

86. — Authority to adopt—Kinsmen, Consent of—Prohibition to adopt.—According to the Hindu law current in the Dravida country, a widow not having her husband's permission may, if duly authorized by his kindred, adopt a son to him. The question,—who are the kinsmen whose assent will supply the want of positive authority of the deceased husband?—must depend upon the circumstances of the family in each case. There must be such evidence of the assent of the kinsmen as suffices to show that the act is done by the widow in the bona fide performance of a religious duty, and not capriciously, or from a corrupt motive. The widow cannot adopt where there is a prohibition by the husband, direct or implied. COLLECTOR OF MADURA v. MUTU RAMALINGA SATHUPATHY. I B. L. R., P. C., 1: 13 Moore's I. A., 397 [10 W. R., P. 88. ————— Authority of husband—Permission of relatives or younger widow—Maratha country.—In the Maratha country a Hindu widow may, without the permission of her husband and without the consent of his kindred, adopt a son to him if the act is done by her in the proper bond fide performance of a religious duty, and neither capriciously nor from a corrupt motive. An elder Hindu widow has the power to adopt a son to her deceased husband without the consent of a younger widow. RAKHMABAI v. RADHABAI

89. ————— Adoption by a widow whose husband died while a minor—Implied authority from minor husband—Adoption from corrupt and improper motives—Onus of proof—Adoption in Gujarat—Kadva Kunbi caste, Adoption among—Custom as to adoption.—In the Maratha country a Hindu widow may, without the permission of her husband and without the consent of her kindred, adopt a son to him if the act is done by her in the proper and bond fide performance of a religious duty, and neither capriciously nor from a corrupt motive. But the adoption must not have been expressly forbidden by the husband and must not have the effect of divesting an estate already vested in a third person. There is no reason for drawing any distinction, as regards the general law, between Gujarat and the Maratha country properly so called. Apart from local or caste custom, the general law in Gujarat must be taken to be as stated in Rakhmabai v. Radhabai, 5 Bom., A. C., 181. A widow has implied authority from her husband to adopt, even though her husband be a minor. Where a widow adopts, there is a presumption that she has performed the duty from proper motives, and the onus lies heavily on him who seeks to set aside the adoption on the ground of corrupt motive. A Hindu widow in Gujarat having adopted a son to her husband, who died before the completion of his sixteenth year, and who was separated from his brother,—Held that the adoption was valid. The authority of the husband to adopt may be implied, although he was a minor at the time of his death. If adoption by a widow be a meritorious act "beneficial to her husband's soul," assent should be implied in the case of a minor husband, as well as in the case of one who had attained his majority. A Hindu widow having adopted a son about eight years after her husband's death, during her last illness when she was confined to her bed,—Held that that circumstance alone did not afford any sufficient reason for supposing that she was not actuated by the sense of the duty she owed to her husband. The fact that the adoption was made on an inauspicious day showed the anxiety of the widow to adopt, but not the motive. PATEL VANDRAVAN JEKISAN v. PATEL MANILAL CHUNILAL

90. ————— Motives of widow in adopting—Adoption from corrupt motives—Presumption.—In Bombay, according to the authorities, if it can be predicated of an adoption by a widow

(In a case where the consent of the husband's kinsmen is not required) that the ceremony has been performed, not as a religious duty, but from sinful and corrupt motives, it is on that account invalid, and the authorities appear to impose upon the Court the duty of inquiring into the motives of the adopting widow where her motives are called in question. Whether the presumption that an adopting widow has performed her duty from proper motives ought or ought not to be deemed an irrebuttable presumption, is a question which still remains to be judicially decided. The fact that the motives of the widow were of a mixed character is not sufficient to rebut the presumption—Patel Vandrayan Jekisan v. Patel Manilal Chunilal, I. L. R., 15 Bom., 565. The fact that the widow has made terms for herself with the father of the boy to be adopted, or that she has solicited a boy whose father will be likely to accede to her wishes, is not sufficient to render the adoption invalid—Bharya Balidat Singh v. Indar Kunwar, I. L. R., 16 Calc., 556; Chitko Raghunath Rajadshah v. Jawaki, 11 Bom. H. C., 199. Where a widow had adopted a son, and it was found by the Courts that, unless she had been assured by the father and guardian of the adopted boy that she would receive Rs. 4,000, she would not have adopted him, but it was not found that she had not the special benefit of her husband in view when she made the adoption,—Held that the presumption that she made the adoption from motives of duty was not rebutted, and that presumption should be allowed to prevail. MAHARAJESWAR FONDIA v. 98. Adoption in Dravida country—Widow's power to adopt with consent of sapindas—Motives for making adoption.—According to the Hindu law, a widow who has received from her deceased husband an express power to adopt a son in the event of his natural-born son dying under age and unmarried may, on the happening of that event, make a valid adoption. Bhobun Moyee Dabee v. Ram Kishore Achary Chowdhry, 10 Moore's I. A., 179, distinguished. Under the law which prevails in the Dravida country, a widow, without any permission from her husband, may, if duly authorized by his kinsmen, adopt a son to him in every case in which such an adoption would be valid if made by her under written authority from her husband. The observations of the Judicial Committee in the Ramnad case, 12 Moore's I. A., 397, to the effect "that there should be such evidence of the assent of kinsmen as suffices to show that the act [of adoption] is done by the widow in the proper and bona fide performance of a religious duty, and neither capriciously nor from a corrupt motive," considered and explained. *VELLANKI VENKATA KRISHNA RAO v. 99. Authority of husband, express or implied—Right of widow to adopt—Assent of nearest sapindas.—Without the express or implied authority of the husband, a widow may make a second adoption under the sanction of the nearest sapindas. With such sanction a second adoption would probably not be recognized as valid in the face of an express prohibition of a second adoption on the part of the husband. When the only surviving members of the family are divided from the deceased husband, for whose benefit it is desired to make the adoption, and also from each other, and equally distant from the deceased, there seems nothing in principle to throw doubt upon the sufficiency of the assent of some of them if bona fide given, if it be shown that the consent of the others is refused from interested or improper motives or without a fair exercise of discretion. PARASARA BHATTAR v. RANGA-RASA BHATTAR I. L. R., 2 Mad., 202

100. Authority of husband—Assent of sapindas.—The sapinda of a deceased person gave his child to the widow of the latter to be adopted in pursuance of an authority which she represented herself to have had from her husband. This natural father of the child was the eldest and managing member of a joint family consisting of himself and his three younger brothers, sons of the first cousin of the deceased. The three younger brothers disputed the validity of the adoption. Two Courts having found against the existence of an authority to the widow given by her deceased husband, the question remained whether the manager giving his child in the manner in which he had given it for adoption, he being a sapinda and in a position to represent other sapindas of the deceased, was an assent by a sapinda to an adoption by a widow sufficient to support her adopting in the absence of an authority from her husband. It was decided that under all the circumstances under which this child had been applied for by the widow and given by the father, the assent of the latter was not one which had rendered the adoption valid as against the brothers. There was no sufficient evidence to show that the widow applied to the boy's father to give his assent as sapinda to an adoption, on the ground that she could not adopt without the sapinda's assent. It was not necessary to determine whether this sapinda could alone have given a valid assent, if it had been given to the widow as one having no authority from her husband to adopt; and if it had been given without his mind having been influenced by other and undue considerations. GANESA RATNAMAIYAR v. GOPALA RATNAMAIYAR. I. L. R., 2 Mad., 370 (I. R., 7 I. A., 173)

101. ———— Authority of husband—Consent of sapinda.—V, one of the nearest male sapindas of S, gave his son in adoption to the widow of S in 1878. Both the giver and receiver professed to have been carrying out the directions of S. In 1888 a suit was brought by N, another sapinda, to set aside this adoption, and it was found that S had not authorized the adoption as alleged by the defendants. Held that, under the circumstances, V's assent to the adoption did not render it valid. VENKATALAKSHMAMMA v. NARASAYYA (I. L. R., 8 Mad., 545)

102. ———— Authority to adopt—Consent to adopt given by husband's family—Adoption in undivided family—Adoption to a husband separated in estate.—A Hindu widow, who has not the family estate vested in her and whose husband was not separated at the time of his death, is not competent to adopt a son to her husband without his authority or the consent of his undivided co-parceners. Where the husband of a Hindu widow dies separated, and she herself is the heir, or she and a junior co-widow are the heirs, she may adopt without the sanction of the husband (if he have not, expressly or by implication, indicated his desire that she shall not do so) and without the sanction of his kindred. N and J were two Hindu brothers undivided in estate. N died first, leaving a widow, K. J died next, leaving two sons and a widow, G (the defendant). K adopted the plaintiff as son to her husband and herself without the consent either of J's two sons or his widow, G. On the death of K and the two sons of J, the plaintiff sued G (the widow of J) for possession of the family estate. G claimed the estate as heir of her last surviving son, and, while admitting the fact of the plaintiff's adoption by K, denied its validity on the ground that the members of the family had given no assent to the adoption. It was admitted that K had not received from her husband N any permission or direction to adopt a son. Held that the plaintiff's adoption by K was invalid, inasmuch as she had not the authority of her husband or the consent of his undivided co-parceners to adopt, nor did she hold any estate in the property. RAMJI v. GHANAU. I. L. R., 6 Bom., 406

103. ———— Undivided Hindu family—Adoption without the consent of husband or his undivided co-parceners and without the authority of her husband to adopt.—A Hindu widow, who has not the estate vested in her, is not competent to adopt a son to her husband without his authority or the consent of his co-parceners with whom he was united in estate at the time of his death. K and V were two Hindu brothers. K had a son who died in 1849 in the lifetime of his father, but who was then united in interest with him (A). K died in 1856, leaving him surviving his two nephews, S and P (the sons of his brother, V), and his daughter-in-law, X (the widow of his predeceased son). At the time of his death, K was united in estate with his nephews S and P. In 1871, V adopted the plaintiff as son to her husband and herself. In 1873 the plaintiff sued P and the sons of S (who died in the meantime) for a share in the family estate. It was found that V had not the authority either of her husband or of her father-in-law, K, or of any of his co-parceners to adopt. Held that the adoption was not valid. Held further that a separated kinsman was not qualified to authorize the adoption. DINKEAR SITARAM v. GANESH SITARAM. I. L. R., 6 Bom., 505

104. ———— Assent of a majority of sapindas—Presumption of bond fide—Degree of relationship of sapindas to husband of adopting widow.—A widow, having survived her son (who died unmarried and issueless), succeeded to his estate, and made an adoption with the assent of three out of the four (of her late husband's) sapindas, who were living at the time and who had been divided from the deceased and from each other. The fourth sapinda, who had refused his consent (apparently without giving reasons for such refusal), now impugned the adoption on the ground that the consent of all existing sapindas was necessary to render it valid, at all events when all stood in the same degree of relationship to the husband of the adopting widow, as was the case here. Held that the assent of every existing sapinda in such a case was not necessary, and that that of a majority would suffice. Collector of Madras v. Moottoo Ramalinga Sathupathy, 12 Moore's I. A., 397, and Parasara Bhattar v. Rangaraja Bhattar, I. L. R., 2 Mad., 202, referred to and considered. Adoption being a proper act, it will be presumed that, when the majority give their assent, such assent was given on bond fide grounds. If, however, it be shown that the majority gave or withheld their assent from improper considerations, such assent or dissent will be of no avail to the party relying on it. Any distinction based upon the degree of relationship as to whose assent is or is not essential becomes immaterial. VENKATAKRISHNAMMA v. ANNAPURNAMMA (I. L. R., 23 Mad., 486)

Estoppel.—B and R were brothers and vatandar kulkarnis of a village in the Kaladgi District. B died leaving him surviving his widow, the defendant. On the death of B, R endeavoured to appropriate the whole vatan estate so as altogether to exclude the defendant. The defendant appealed to the revenue authorities, and R admitted her right to a moiety of the vatan. Subsequently in 1856 the defendant passed a document to R to the effect that, in consideration of receiving certain property as her share, she would not trouble R in the enjoyment by him of the rest of the vatan, and that she was to hold and enjoy this property for her life. The arrangement continued till 1891. In the meanwhile, the defendant adopted her brother's son and made a gift to him of the property held by her under the agreement of 1856. R having died, his son, the plaintiff, brought a suit against the defendant for a declaration that the adoption was invalid, as also the gift to the adoptee, and that he was entitled to the property after the death of the defendant. The Court of first instance held that the husband of the defendant and the father of the plaintiff were undivided; that the alleged adoption was not proved; that it was invalid, having been made without the consent of the plaintiff; and that, after the death of the defendant, the property in the possession of the defendant should revert to the plaintiff. On appeal the lower Appellate Court found the fact of adoption proved, but held that the adoption was invalid, and upheld the decree of the Court of first instance as to the right of the plaintiff as reversioner to the property in the possession of defendant. On appeal to the High Court.—Held (reversing the decrees of the lower Courts) that the document passed by the defendant to the father of the plaintiff implied a previous separation between the husband of the defendant and the father of the plaintiff. The expression that she was to hold and enjoy for life merely described the ordinary estate of a Hindu widow, and did not impose any restriction on the exercise of her powers. As a widow of a Hindu separated from his brother in worship and estate, she could adopt a son, which right, even if she could forego, she did not by the document which was of a family settlement, and recognised the right of defendant as that of a widow of a separated brother. The fact of separation having thus become distinct and having been acted on for about twenty-eight years, the plaintiff was not at liberty to impeach it. Held also that, as the widow of B separated in interest from R, the defendant was at liberty to adopt a son without the previous sanction of R or the plaintiff. The fact that the adoptee was son of the brother of the defendant did not render the adoptee unfit for adoption, as it was a case from the Southern Maratha country. Held further that, though so long a period as twenty-five years had been allowed to pass between the date of the death of her husband and that of adoption, that circumstance did in any way extinguish the right of the defendant to adopt under circumstances calling for adoption.

a united family—Consent of the head of the family.—The widow of a deceased co-parcener in a joint Hindu family can adopt with the sole assent of her father-in-law if he is the head of the family and natural guardian of the widow, whatever may be her motives or the effect of the adoption on the undivided kinsmen. B and his two sons, N and V, were members of a joint Hindu family. In 1883 B and N commenced to live separately from V, but the family estate was not divided. In 1886 N died, leaving a widow without male issue. In 1897 N's widow adopted the plaintiff with the consent of her father-in-law B, with whom she was living. B died shortly after the adoption. Thereupon the plaintiff as adopted son sued V to recover a moiety of the family estate. The defence to this suit was that the plaintiff's adoption was invalid on the ground that the adoption had not been made with the assent of all the co-parceners. Held that the adoption was valid. As B, who was the head of the family and natural guardian of the adoptive mother, had given his assent to the adoption, the consent of the other co-parceners was not necessary. VITHOBA v. BARU

Adoption by widow without consent of husband—Jains of Southern India—Evidence of adoption—Proof of custom—Will of a Jain widow.—In a suit to declare plaintiff's right as the adopted son of a Jain (deceased) and as a beneficiary under the will of the adoptive mother, it appeared that the plaintiff had been taken in adoption by the widow without authority from her husband or consent of his kinsmen. Held that it lay on the plaintiff to prove by evidence that the adoption was valid, and that he was entitled to take under the will according to the custom governing the family, and held on the evidence that the plaintiff had failed to prove this. Per BEER, J.—If a Jain widow succeeds to her husband's property absolutely and has the right to dispose of it as she likes, the adoption of a son to herself who may succeed to such property would be valid. Observations of HOLLOWAY, J., in Rithcurn Lallah v. Soojan Mull Lallah, 9 Mad. Jur., 21, distinguished, on the ground that there was no reason for supposing that the parties to the present suit were other than natives of Southern India whose ancestors had been converted to Jainism. Adoption by widow of a predeceased son of owner after the estate had vested in the daughters of the deceased owner—Assent of a minor daughter in whom the estate had vested to the adoption—Ratification by the minor on attaining years of discretion—Adoption invalid—Assent not equivalent to consent.—On the death of one V, his estate vested in his two daughters, one of whom was a minor. Six months after V's death, his daughter-in-law, S (widow of his predeceased son), adopted the plaintiff. It was alleged that the daughters consented to the adoption. Held that the adoption was invalid, as the minor daughter could not give such a consent to it as would operate to divest her of her estate. Per FULTON and HOSKING, JJ.—Subsequent assent to an adoption cannot give it validity if it was invalid when made. Per BANADE, J.—The adoption of the plaintiff was invalid for the double reason that S had no power to adopt, as she was not the widow of the last male holder, and the nearest heirs, the daughters of the deceased P, were not proved to have given their consent to the divesting of the estate, which had come to them by inheritance, in favour of S or the plaintiff. Mere presence at the ceremony and the absence of any objection might imply an acquiescence, but mere acquiescence is not equivalent to consent. VASUDEO VISHNU MAHAR v. RAMCHANDRA VINAYAK MODAK . I. Adoption by a daughter-in-law of A after the estate has vested in A's widow—Permission by A to adopt—Non-consent of widow—Divesting of estate once vested—Widow's authority to adopt in Bombay—Daughter-in-law must have permission—Co-widows—Adoption by one co-widow—Adoption of a son older than adoptive mother.—An adoption cannot divest a person of an estate which has once vested in him, unless such adoption is made with his consent. An exception to this rule is where a co-widow adopts. Such an adoption will divest the younger widow of her estate. Another exception is where a daughter-in-law adopts with the authority of her father-in-law, who is head of the family, as in Vithoba v. Bapu, I. L. R., 16 Bom., 110. Unless prohibited expressly or by implication, a widow in the Presidency of Bombay has authority to adopt, but a daughter-in-law, i.e., the widow of a predeceased son, must be specially authorized by her father-in-law in order that she may make a valid adoption binding as against the heirs of her father-in-law. S was the widow of B, who died in 1877 in the lifetime of his father R. Fourteen years later, viz., in 1891, R died, leaving a widow Saibai, who succeeded to his estate as his heir. In March 1892 S adopted the plaintiff G as son to her husband, alleging that she had R's permission to do so. G sued for a declaration that as adopted son of B he was entitled to succeed as heir to the property of E as against the defendant V, who claimed to have been adopted by Saibai as son to E. Held (confirming the decree of the lower Court) that, as the adoption of the plaintiff G was made by S without proper authority and without Saibai's consent, it was inoperative and invalid. As Saibai did not give her consent to the plaintiff's adoption, that adoption did not divest her of her exclusive right to succeed as heir of R. GOPAL BALKRISHNA KENJALE v. Adoption by widow of a predeceased son—Consent of mother-in-law—Rule that adoption must be by widow of the last full owner—Exceptions to this rule.—By Hindu law as settled by judicial decisions, it is only the widow of the last full owner who has the right to take a son in adoption to such owner, and a person in whom the estate does not vest cannot make a valid adoption so as to divest (without their consent) third parties, in whom the estate has vested, of their proprietary rights. To this rule there are four exceptions: (1) In the case of co-widows. Though, on the death of the husband without male issue, the estate vests in all his widows, it has been held that the elder widow can, by adopting a son with the express or implied permission of her husband, divest the co-widow or widows of their vested rights. The consent of such younger widows has not been held to be essential. (2) In the case of a mother who succeeds as heir to an unmarried son, legitimate or adopted, who dies after his father. In such a case the right of the widow to take a son in adoption to her husband has been conceded to her, though such a son cannot properly be described as being the heir of the last full owner. (3) When an adoption takes place with the full assent of the party in whom the estate has vested by inheritance, the adoption is validated by such consent. (4) Where there has been ratification by conduct or acquiescence. Per PARSONS, J.—The mere fact that the adopting widow is not the widow of the last male holder would not make an adoption by her spiritually invalid, while any difficulty as to the inheritance and the estate is cured by the assent to the adoption given by the person in whom that inheritance or estate is vested. One B died in 1878, leaving a widow U and a daughter-in-law S him surviving. His only son D, the husband of S, had predeceased him. On B's death, his estate vested in his widow U. In 1879 S, with U's consent, adopted a son (defendant No. 2). The plaintiff in this suit sued to recover certain land which formed part of B's estate, alleging that it had been given to him by U. The first defendant alleged and proved that he had bought the land from the third defendant, who was the adopted son of S. Held (dismissing the suit) that the adoption was valid, and that the first defendant was entitled to the land. PATAPPA AKKAPPA PATEL v. He was related to his alleged adoptive father as father's father's brother's son's son's son's son. It was contended on behalf of the defendant, who was related to the plaintiff's adoptive father as brother's son's son, that the plaintiff's relationship was not too remote to admit of his being validly adopted in preference to the defendant and other near relatives. Held that the plaintiff, by reason of his natural relationship towards his adoptive father, belonged to the same gotra as the latter, and although such relationship compared with that of the defendant was remote, that circumstance could not ipso facto vitiate his adoption. Bhyan Ram Singh v. Bhyan Ugur Singh, 13 Moore's I. A., 573, and Uma Devi v. Gokoolanund Das Mahapatra, L. R., 5 I. A., 40, referred to. According to the Hindu law, as observed by the Benares school, the ceremony of upanayana, representing as it does the second birth of a boy and the beginning of his education in the duties of his tribe, is also the ultimate limit of time when a valid adoption in the dattaka form can take place. Adoption in that form implies that the second birth has taken place in the adoptive family; and it cannot be effected after the boy's place in his natural family has become irrevocably fixed by the upanayana representing his second birth therein. The age of the boy is material only as determining the term at which the upanayana may be performed. Kerutnarsin v. Bhobunesree, 1 Sel. Rep., 161, and Ramkishore Achari Chaudres v. Bhobunesree Deba Choudraia, S. D. A., Ben., 1859, 229, referred to. Dharma Dagu v. Ram Krishna Chinnaji, I. L. R., 10 Bom., 80, dissented from. According to the Kalika Purana as interpreted by the Dattaka Mimamsa of Nan's Pandita, an adoption in the dattaka form is wholly null and void if made after the adoptee has completed the fifth year of his age. It is a mistake to hold that according to the Dattaka Mimamsa, so long as an adoption takes place while the adoptee is under six years of age, it is valid. The mistake arises from supposing that the word panchvarshya used in paragraphs 43 and 53 of the Dattaka Mimamsa necessarily indicates that the person referred to has passed the fifth anniversary of his birth. It indicates on the contrary that he is in his fifth year. Thakoor Omrao Singh v. Thakoorance Mehtab Kooner, 1 N. W., 103a, dissented from. The authenticity of the text of the Kalika Purana, which lays down that a child must not be adopted whose age exceeds five years, is extremely doubtful. The interpretation given to that text in the Dattaka Mimamsa was not necessarily intended to be universally applicable, and admits of a construction which would confine the application of the text to Brahmans intended for the priesthood; and various other equally plausible interpretations have been adopted by other authorities. This being so, it would be unsafe to act upon the text in question and upon the interpretation placed upon it in the Dattaka Mimamsa, so as to set aside an adoption which took place many years ago, which had ever since been recognized as valid, and under which the adoptee had ever since been in possession of his adoptive father's estate upon the single ground that at the time of the adoption the adopted son was more than five years of age. In such a case, the onus of proof is upon the person who alleges this adoption to be invalid. Haimun Chull Singh v. Kooner Gansheem Singh, 5 W. R., P. C., 69, referred to. In a case where the validity of an adoption was in dispute and the parties to the suit were Chhatryas, —Held that, even if it had been established that five years was the rigid and inflexible limit of age for the validity of all adoptions among the "twice-born" classes, so as to be applicable even to Chhatryas in

The authority in the school of Benares of the Dattaka Mimamsa of Nanda Pandita considered. The Mimamsa is not on questions of adoption an "infallible guide" in the school of Benares, and is not followed when it imposes on the right of adoption restrictions not to be found in the recognized authorities of the school of Benares. Held by BANERJI, J. (AIKMAN, J., concurring)—The adoption by a Hindu belonging to one of the three regenerate classes of his mother's sister's son is prohibited according to the Hindu law of the Benares school. 160. ——— Construction of deed of gift.—Adoption of eldest or only son.—A Hindu died after having made a hibbanama, or deed of gift, giving the bulk of his property to the eldest son of one of his brothers, designating him as his pallok-putra. The donee thereof died without issue, but leaving a widow him surviving. On the death of his widow, his cousins sued his step-brother for possession of their share of his property, on the allegation that he had been adopted by their uncle, and consequently the relationship between him and his step-brother had been severed, and that they were equally entitled with the step-brother to succeed. The defendant denied the fact of the adoption. The High Court held that the intention to adopt and the fact of adoption were proved by the terms of the deed of gift. Held by the Privy Council, reversing the judgment of the High Court, that the words of the hibbanama ["but as I had no son or daughter, I took you as my pallok-putra in the month of Aghran 1211 B.S. 165. ————— Absence of authority of husband—Validity of adoption.—In the Presidency of Bombay a widow may give in adoption a younger son where her husband has not, by direct prohibition or otherwise, indicated his unwillingness that she should, after his death, give such younger in adoption, the husband's assent to such a gift being implied. But it cannot be implied to the gift by his widow after his death of an eldest, and still less of an only, son in adoption, where he did not expressly indicate such assent in his lifetime. Semble—Where a father gives his only son in adoption as a dwyamushyayana, he consents to deprive himself of one-half of the spiritual benefit derivable from the performance of religious obsequies. Hence his consent cannot be implied even to such a gift when made by his widow after his death. To such a case the factum valet principle is wholly inapplicable because the adoption would be, as regards her, not quod fieri non debuit, but quod fieri non potuit. The maxim quod fieri non debuit factum valet considered, and its application pointed out. There is no authority for drawing any distinction between Sudras and the other classes on the question of the legality of the adoption of an eldest or an only son. *Mhalsabai v. 166. ————— Lingayats—Gift in adoption by widow without an express authority from her husband.—The plaintiff, a Sudra of the Lingayat caste, sued for possession of certain property, alleging that he had been adopted by the defendant, a widow of the same caste. The defendant denied the adoption, and contended that it was invalid, inasmuch as he was an only son, and had been given in adoption by his widowed mother without an express authority from her husband. The plaintiff, in support of his adoption, produced two documents executed by the defendant, viz., a deed of adoption and a compromise, in which the defendant had ratified the plaintiff's adoption. It was found that the defendant was very young, and did not act independently in the execution of those documents. Held that the adoption was invalid on two grounds, viz., 1st, that the mother had no authority to give the plaintiff in adoption, because he was the only son of her deceased husband at the time of the adoption; and, 2ndly, that the defendant (whether an infant or not) was not, either at the time of the alleged adoption or at that of the alleged ratification of it, a free agent, but was subject to undue influence. [I. L. R., 18 Mad., 58]

On appeal to the Privy Council on the general question as to the validity by Hindu law of the adoption of the only son of his natural father decided in one judgment upon these two appeals.—Held that such an adoption is valid by that law. The authority of a widow in reference to adoption not being identical in different schools of Hindu law, it was held, on a question peculiar to the appeal from Madras, that it is there established in regard to the giving of a boy in adoption by the widow of his natural father that, unless there has been some express prohibition by the husband, the wife's power with the concurrence of sapindas, where the concurrence of sapindas is required, is co-extensive with the power of the husband. 179. ———— Validity of adoption.—It is now well settled law that the adoption of a sister's son by a Hindu of the Vaishya caste is valid. GANPATRAY VIRISHVAR v. VITHOBA KHAN-DAPPA 4 Bom., A. C., 180

180. ———— Validity of adoption—Custom—Acquiescence in fact of adoption.—Suit to set aside the adoption of the first defendant, the alleged adopted son of plaintiff's undivided brother, to declare plaintiff's title to certain lands and for possession. First defendant pleaded that the question of his adoption was res judicata, and the Civil Judge so decided. Upon appeal, the High Court reversed the decision, and remanded the case for decision on the merits. After trial, the Civil Judge found that the fact of the adoption was satisfactorily proved, and that first defendant had done acts as adopted son since 1835 at least. It was also argued on plaintiff's part that the adoption was illegal, being that of a sister's son, and the judgment of HOLLOWAY, J., in Narasama v. Balaramachari, 1 Mad., 420, was cited. The Civil Judge decided that this applied only to the Andhra Country, and that, as the custom was common in the Dravida country, the adoption was legal, or, if not legal, that it was too late to dispute it. The plaintiff appealed, and the case was referred to a full Court. The Court decided that on the general principles of Hindu law, as expounded by the writers of all schools, a Brahman could not legally adopt his sister's son, but as the existence of a custom, derogating from the general law, was asserted, they directed an enquiry into the existence of the supposed custom. The Civil Judge found that a rule of customary law did exist affirming the legality of the adoption of a sister's son by a Brahman. Upon the question coming before the High Court, the finding of the Civil Judge as to the existence of the custom was reversed and the following issue sent for determination:—"Has the conduct of the plaintiff and that of the members of his family been such as to render it inequitable for him to set up as against the present defendant the rule of law upon which he now insists?" The Judge found to the effect that there had been a long course of acquiescence by all the members of the family, the plaintiff included, in the validity of sonship asserted. Held that this would be hardly enough if through the influence of that course of representation by conduct the defendant had not altered his situation so that it would be impossible to restore him to that original situation; that he had done so; and that, although the adoption was invalid and inadequate of itself to create communion, that communion had been created by the course of conduct of the plaintiff and his family, coupled with the defendant's changed situation which had resulted. GOPALATYAN v. sister's son, and subsequently, apprehending that the adoption was invalid, executed a will by which he left his estate to X. After B's death, X obtained possession, and remained in possession of the estate till his death, which occurred before he had attained majority. After this, joint possession of the estate was obtained by P and S, two widows of B, who set up a right of inheritance from X, as being in the position of mothers to him, in consequence of his adoption by their deceased husband. A suit was brought by S against P for partition of the estate. Held that the adoption of X by B, a Brahman, was invalid, and that P and S were not entitled to succeed him as his heirs. PARBATI v. 184. ——— Sister's son, mother's sister's son, and daughter's son.—The adoption of a mother's sister's son by a Hindu of any of the three regenerate classes, Brahman, Kshatriya, and Vaisya, equally with the adoption of a daughter's son or a sister's son is contrary to law and void. The ancient texts condemning such adoptions are not only admonitions, but have been judicially decided to be prohibitions of law for such a length of time that it is now not competent to a Court to treat them as open to question in this respect. The judgment in Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga Sathupathy, 13 Moore's I. A., 437, gives no countenance to the conclusion that, in order to bring a case under any rule of law laid down by recognized authority for Hindus generally, evidence must be given of actual events to show that in point of fact the people subject to that general law regulate their lives by it. BHAGWAN SINGH v. 195. ———— Relinquishment by first adopted son in favour of his adoptive mother of his rights as adopted son—Release. The plaintiff was adopted in 1850 by K, the widow of one G. In June 1885, he executed a document which recited that he and K had not been on amicable terms, and that his adoption had consequently been cancelled, and that she had adopted another son (defendant No. 1) to whom she had given all rights of heirship, and declared that, in consideration of Rs200 paid by K, he delivered back to her the rights which he had obtained by virtue of his adoption and heirship. K died in October 1885, and the plaintiff brought this suit, as adopted son, to recover the property of G. The first defendant, who had been adopted by K, subsequently to the plaintiff's adoption, contended that he had been validly adopted, and that he was entitled to the property. He relied (inter alia) upon the document executed by plaintiff in June 1885. Held that the plaintiff could not renounce his status as adopted son, although he might give up his right of inheritance, and that whatever estate became vested in K by the release came to the plaintiff on her death either as the adopted son of G or as heir of K. Held also that the defendant's subsequent adoption was invalid, and that nothing would pass to him by force of such adoption. *MAHADU GANU v. the defendant. Subsequently to this adoption, the deceased's mother adopted the plaintiff. Thereupon both plaintiff and defendant claimed the deceased's estate. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed. The deceased's mother having succeeded as heir to her son, her mother-in-law could not by any adoption divest her of her rights as such heir without her consent. The defendant's adoption was therefore invalid. GAYDAPPA v. GINIMALLAPPA

197. ———— Jain law—Validity of adoption. In a suit to which the parties were Jains, and in which the plaintiff claimed a declaration that he was adopted by the defendant to her deceased husband, and that as such adopted son he was entitled to all the property left by her deceased husband, it was found that subsequent to the husband's death the defendant had adopted another person who had died prior to the adoption of the plaintiff, and without leaving widow or child. Held that the powers of a Jain widow, except that she can make an adoption without the permission of her husband or the consent of his heirs, and may adopt a daughter's son, and that no ceremonies are necessary, are controlled by the Hindu law of adoption, and the kritrima form of adoption not being recognized by the Jain community or among the Hindus of the North-Western Provinces, it must be assumed that the widow had power to make a second adoption, and that such adoption was to her husband. Held therefore that the adoption of the plaintiff was valid and effective. Held also that, the effect of the second adoption being to make the second adopted son the son of the deceased husband, he must be treated as if he had been born, or at all events conceived, in the husband's lifetime, and his title related back to the death of the elder brother, the first adopted son, so that, if the elder brother left no widow or child who would succeed him to the exclusion of his younger brother, the second adopted son would succeed as heir to the father. *Shree Singh Rai v. 198. ———— Simultaneous adoption—Invalid adoption. A simultaneous adoption is not valid according to Hindu law. The adoption of one son alone is actually and in itself wholly sufficient to satisfy the purpose of the law; the adoption of two is not within the scope of the power of adoption, and where such a thing is attempted, neither of the children is the legally adopted son of the deceased, although the ceremonies of adoption may have been performed as regards each, and also at the same time. *GYANENDRO CHUNDER LAHIRI v. and you . . . the younger widow may adopt three sons successively." Held that this might more reasonably be construed as giving the elder widow authority to adopt three sons successively, and then a similar power to the younger, than as authorizing simultaneous adoptions. Held also that, supposing that the husband had intended to give such an authority, the law did not allow two simultaneous adoptions. The opinion of W. H. Macnaghten on the subject referred to and approved. AKHOT CHUNDER BAGCHI v. KALAPADAR HAJI receive the letter which was returned to S by the postal authorities, and the plaintiff was eventually adopted without the consent of K. Held that the consent of K was not a condition precedent to the validity of the adoption, and that it was not invalid by reason of its having been made without K's advice and consent. SURENDRA NANDAN alias GYANENDRA NANDAN DAS v. 306. Adoption under agreement—Validity of adoption by unmarried widow—Agreement at time of adoption effecting rights of adopted son.—The defendant's husband, V, died intestate in 1873, leaving his widow (L, the defendant) and a son, B, him surviving. A posthumous son, R, was subsequently born to him, who died an infant aged four months. B died in July 1877, aged seven years. The plaintiff alleged that on the 18th April 1878 the defendant adopted him as the heir of her husband, V, and on the same date made an agreement with his (the plaintiff's) natural father, whereby he was deprived of the immediate rights in the estate of the said V, to which he became entitled by reason of his adoption. The agreement was in the following terms:—"Memorandum of agreement made this 18th day of April in the Christian year 1878 between G of Bombay, Hindu inhabitant, of the one part, and L, widow of V, also of Bombay, Hindu inhabitant, of the other part. Whereas the said V died intestate at Bombay on or about the 5th day of October 1873, leaving him surviving the said L as his only widow, a son named B, who was born during his lifetime, and another son, named R, who was born after his death, as his only heirs and legal representatives him surviving. And whereas the said R died while he was an infant, and the said B died at the age of seven, leaving the said L, his mother, as his only heir and legal representative him surviving; and whereas the said L is desirous of adopting a son as heir to her said husband, and has requested the said G to allow her to adopt one of his sons, named S, who has now attained the age of eleven years, on the terms and conditions hereinafter mentioned, which the said G has agreed to do. Now these presents witness that, in pursuance of the said agreement and in consideration of the premises, the said G has agreed to give, and the said L has agreed to accept, in adoption the said S on the express terms and conditions following, that is to say:—1. That the said L shall have during her lifetime, both before and after the said S has attained his majority, absolute power and control over the whole of the immovable and movable property, estate, and effects so inherited by her as the heir and surviving legal personal representative of B as aforesaid, and shall be at liberty to deal with and manage the same according to her own absolute discretion, as she may, in the exercise of such discretion, deem most advantageous to the estate. 2. The said L shall and will during her life provide the said S with lodging, food, clothes, medical attendance, and all other necessities, and will generally maintain and educate him at her own expense in a manner suitable to the position of his family, and will get him married and perform the usual ceremonies on his marriage at her own expense as aforesaid in a manner suitable to the position and respectability of the said family. 3. That after the death of the said L, the said S, his heirs, and legal representatives will be entitled to inherit for his and their own absolute use and benefit all the movable and immovable property, estate, and effects of which the said L shall be possessed at the time of her death. 4. That the terms and conditions specified and contained in cl. 1 and 2 and 3 of this agreement shall have full effect and be considered as valid and operative in every respect, any provision of law or the Hindu Shastras to the contrary notwithstanding." The plaintiff alleged that since he had attained majority he had always repudiated the validity of the agreement as affecting his rights in any way. The plaintiff also alleged that on the Dussera day of 1883 the defendant assembled her friends and relatives, and in view of the approaching majority of the plaintiff, which he attained on the 14th December 1883, announced her intention of making over to him all the estate of her deceased husband V; and that she thereupon renounced and waived all the benefits which she had tried to retain for herself by the agreement of the 18th April 1878, and expressed her intention to devote herself to a religious life. The plaintiff complained that recently the defendant had begun to interfere in the management of the estate, and that she had alleged that the plaintiff's adoption was invalid on the ground that her (the defendant's) head had not been shaved at the time of the adoption, and had threatened that she would proceed to adopt a son and ruin the plaintiff. He prayed for a declaration that he was the validly adopted son of, and entitled to the property which formerly belonged to, V, and that the defendant was only entitled to maintenance; that the agreement of the 18th April 1878 was invalid; or, in any event, that the defendant had given to the plaintiff all rights to which she might have been entitled under the said agreement, etc. The defendant admitted that she had performed certain ceremonies which she intended to be an adoption of the plaintiff as son of V; but she alleged that at the time of the said adoption she had not, nor had she since, undergone tonsure; and that, according to the custom of the Dairadnya community, to which she and the plaintiff belonged, a widow could not adopt until her head had undergone tonsure. She also stated that the majority of her caste had declared the said adoption to be invalid, and she submitted the question as to its validity to the Court. With regard to the agreement of the 11th April 1878, she contended that, if the adoption was valid, the plaintiff was bound by the terms and conditions contained therein, as she would not, except upon those terms and conditions, have adopted him. She further contended that on the death of her husband, V, his sons, B and R, became entitled to his estate, and that, upon the death of B, who was the survivor of the said two sons, she succeeded to the estate as heiress to B. Held that the adoption of the plaintiff was a valid adoption. From the evidence it appeared that the requisite religious ceremonies had been performed. Before the defendant took part in them, Shastris were consulted as to whether the defendant, while untanned, could properly do so, and on making certain expiatory gifts she was pronounced competent. Under such circumstances, the Court could not hold her to be incompetent. Even if other Shastris were of a different opinion, a Civil Court could not decide between conflicting opinions upon such a question of ecclesiastical etiquette. If an adoption be performed with all requisite rites, with the assistance of priests and in accordance with the opinions of Shastris, the Court will uphold it, even against the opinions of other Shastris expressing or entertaining contrary views. Held that the effect of the agreement of the 18th April 1878 was to give the defendant the beneficial ownership of the estate for her life, with the largest possible discretionary powers of management, subject to the duty of maintaining and educating the plaintiff. Held also, following Chittho v. Janaki, 11 Bom., 199, that the agreement was valid and binding on the plaintiff, and that the defendant had not waived the benefits to which she was entitled under its provisions. RAVJI VINAYAKRAV JAGANNATH SHANKARSETT v. 207. Invalid agreement relating to estate of adopted son.—A talukdar by his will authorized his senior widow to select and adopt a minor male child of his family to be the owner of the entire riasat. This power having been exercised, the adoption was questioned on the ground that the widow had agreed, with the natural father of the adopted son, that she should retain the whole estate during her life. Held that this had not rendered the adoption conditional, and that it did not affect the rights of the adopted son. Even if it had amounted to a condition, the analogy, such as it was, presented by the equities relating to powers of appointment under English law, suggested that the condition itself would have been void without invalidating the adoption. BHAIYA RAHIDAT SINGH v. It was found that the plaintiff's natural father was aware of the dispositions contained in the will, and that the testator would not have adopted the plaintiff but for the consent of the natural father to those dispositions. The defendants, who claimed under a gift from the wife, had denied the adoption in their written statement, and on appeal raised the further plea that the adoption, if any, was conditional on the provisions of the will being acquiesced in. Held (1) that the defendants were not precluded from succeeding on the latter of these inconsistent pleas; (2) that the plaintiff was not entitled to the ancestral property devised by the will to the testator's wife. Lakshmi v. 214. ——— Power of adopted son to set aside gift made before his adoption.—The adoption of a son by a Hindu widow has a retrospective effect; a son therefore adopted to her husband by a widow is entitled to set aside a gift of ancestral immoveable property made by his adoptive father's widow previous to his adoption. NATHAJI KRISHNAJI v. 217. ——— Custom of adoption of Gayawals of Gaya.—Effect on adopted son as to his rights in family of natural father.—The proved practice of the Gayawals in adopting sons did not sever the adopted child from the family of his natural father, so that he did not lose his rights therein. LACHMAN LAL CHOWDHRI v. 219. ——— Rights in his natural family.—Inheritance.—The severance between an adopted son and his natural family is so complete that no mutual rights as to succession to

property can arise between them. SRINIVASA AYYANGAR v. KUPPAN AYYANGAR, ROYAN KRISHNA-MACHARIYAR v. KUPPAN AYYANGAR . . . 1 Mad., 180

220. ——— Inheritance in adopted family.—Adoption is tantamount to the birth of a son to the adopter, and the property inherited from the adopter must be regarded as ancestral; during the lifetime of his father a son cannot claim to have a specific share declared and defined, but is only entitled to a decree declaring the property to be ancestral. HEERA SINGH v. BURZAR SINGH
[1 Agra, 256]

221. ——— Consent to subsequent adoption.—Liability to deprivation of inheritance by will.—Where a Hindu has adopted a son, he acquires the right of a son in the hereditary immoveable property of the adoptive father; and he cannot be deprived of these rights by the adoptive father afterwards assuming to adopt a second son and settling the hereditary property upon such second adopted son, coupled with declarations that the first son was disinherited. According to Hindu law, an adoption of a second son during the lifetime of a previously adopted son is inoperative. A childless Hindu adopted A as his son; afterwards he adopted B as his son and made a will, dividing his property, ancestral as well as acquired, between A and B. A filed a petition denying the right of his adoptive father to adopt B, and protesting against the will; but afterwards he signed a consent to the will. Held that, as the father afterwards endeavoured to deprive A of all his rights, as well those under the will as by the adoption, the consent did not bind A, since it was given on the basis of a family arrangement, from which the adoptive father afterwards departed. Semble—That if the consent were given by A in ignorance of his right, it would not be binding upon him. SUDANUND MOHAPATTUR v. The true meaning of paragraphs 24 and 25 of section V of the Dattaka Chaudrika is that an adopted son and the adopted son of a natural son stand in the same position, and this rule does not extend to distinct collateral heirs. DING NATH MOOKERJEE v. 224. ————— Succession—Sapinda relationship.—The rights of an adopted son, unless contracted by express texts, are in every respect similar to those of a natural-born son. An adopted son takes by inheritance from the relatives, on the maternal side, of his adoptive father in the same manner as a son begotten would take. There is no difference as regards sapinda relationship between the adopted and natural-born son. JOY KISHORE CHOWDHRY v. PANCHOO BANOO 4 C. L. R., 538

225. ————— Succession lineal and collateral.—According to Hindu law, an adopted son succeeds not only lineally, but also collaterally, to the inheritance of his adoptive father's relations. SIMBHOOCHUNDER CHOWDHRY v. NARAINI DEBI . . . 5 W. R., P. C., 100

226. ————— Termination of authority to adopt—Succession of adopted son to collaterals in gotra not that of father by adoption.—An instrument of permission (sanmati patra) to a Hindu wife to adopt should she be left a widow provided that "dattaka (adopted) son shall be entitled to perform your and my shraddha and that of our ancestors, and to succeed to the property." The husband and wife had a son born, who survived his father, succeeded to the property, and died before his mother, leaving a widow, who, as heir, took possession of it for her widow's estate. The mother then professed to exercise the above power, and in the suit arising thereupon—Bhoobunmoyee Debi v. Ramkishore Achary Chowdhry, 10 Moore's I. A., 379—it was decided that, the son's widow having acquired a vested interest, a new heir could not be so substituted for her. Held that, although such a substitution might have been disallowed without the adoption being held invalid for all other purposes, the above decision had determined that, upon the vesting of the estate in the widow, the power of adoption was incapable of execution, and was at an end; and that this would have been the conclusion if the question of the validity of the power had been raised without any previous decision upon it. An adopted son occupies the same position in the family of the adopter as a natural-born son, except in a few instances which are accurately defined both in the Dattaka Chandrika and Dattaka Mimamsa, governing authorities in the Bengal school. An adopted son succeeds not only lineally, but collaterally to the inheritance of his relations by adoption. Simbhoochunder Chowdhry v. Naraini Debi, 5 W. R., P. C., 100, referred to and followed. Held in this case that the adopted son of the maternal grandfather of the deceased, though the gotra into which he was adopted was not the same as the latter's, was an heir nearer to him than such maternal grandfather's grandnephew. PADMAKUMARI DEBI CHOWDHURANI v. Court of Wards, I. L. R., 8 Calc., 302, referred to and followed. Where a natural-born son, had there been one, would have been entitled to succeed a maternal uncle, as being brother's daughter's son to the latter,—Held that an adopted son, who had been adopted by a widow under her deceased husband's authority, was entitled, in like manner, to inherit, at the death of the widow, from her father's brother. KALI KUMUL MOZUMDAR v. 265. ————— Succession of adopted son—Divesting of estate.—An adopted son, as such, takes by inheritance, and not by devise. A son cannot be adopted to the great-grandfather of the last taker after the lapse of several successive years, when all the spiritual purposes of a son, according to the largest construction of them, would have been satisfied. When the estate of a son is unlimited, and that son marries and leaves a widow his heir, she acquires a vested interest in her husband's property as widow, and a new heir cannot be substituted by adoption to defeat that estate, and take as an adopted son what a natural-born son would not have taken. daughter died without issue before her mother. B D died in October 1864, leaving a will, of which she appointed her brother G executor, and G, in accordance with the directions in her will, took possession of the property, which B D took as widow and under the will of P. K died in 1855, when still a minor, leaving a minor widow, and having made a will, by which he gave permission to his widow to adopt a son. The widow of K adopted a son in August 1876. In a suit brought by the plaintiff as adopted son of K and heir of P to recover the property left by P, the issue was raised whether, assuming the plaintiff to be the legally adopted son of K, he was the heir of P. Held that, his adoption not having taken place when the succession to the property of P opened out on the death of B D, he was not entitled to the property; his adoptive mother could not claim on the death of B D to hold the property as trustee for the plaintiff; and inasmuch as the property must have vested in some one on the death of B D, and property once vested cannot, by Hindu law, be divested, the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed. KALLI PROSONO GHOSH v. 267. ————— Divesting of property.—A, who had a son, B, by his wife C, during the lifetime of his son executed an uncommuted puttro in favour of C, empowering her to adopt a son in the event of the death of B. B, on coming of age, succeeded to the ancestral and other estate of his father, who had died. Subsequently B died childless, and his widow succeeded as heir to her deceased husband. C afterwards exercised the power of adoption from her husband, and adopted D. Held that although, as heir to A, D could not displace the widow and full heir of B, and that although as heir to B he came after B's widow and mother, D might succeed when on their deaths he united in himself the capacities of heir to A and heir to B. JOY KISHORE CHOWDERY v. PANCHOO BABOO

[4 C. L. R., 538]

268. ————— Adoptive son claiming share in estates already vested in another before the date of the adoption—Fraud.—Shortly before his death in 1862, A, by his will, gave his widow power to adopt a son. In consequence of fraud on the part of B, the son of a brother of A, in suppressing this will and setting up another, the will was not proved until 1874, when the widow exercised the power. C, the widow of another brother, had died in 1867, and B had succeeded to her estate. The adopted son now sued by his mother to recover a half share in C's estate, alleging that his adoptive mother, in consequence of the fraudulent act of B in suppressing the will under which the power of adoption was given, and by setting up a false one, was unable to exercise the power of adoption before the death of C, and that thus he had been deprived of the opportunity of succeeding to C's estate. Held that, although B had committed fraud in suppressing the will and setting up a false one, and had so placed obstacles in the way of the adoptive mother of the plaintiff taking a son in adoption earlier, yet that, as the plaintiff was not in existence at the time the fraud was committed, such fraud was too remote so far as it affected him, and that the Court, as a Court of Equity, could not disturb the estate which had already vested in B. The right to succession is a right which vests immediately on the death of the owner of the property, and cannot, under any circumstances, remain in abeyance in expectation of the birth of a preferable heir not conceived at the time of the owner's death. Keshub Chunder Ghose v. Bisheem Pershad Bose, S. D. A., 1860, p. 340, and Bhoolun Moger Debia v. Ram Kishore Acharj Chowdury, 10 Moore's J. A., 279, followed. NILCOMUL LAHURI v. JOTENDRO MOHUN LAHURI

Held in the same case by the Privy Council, affirming the decision of the High Court, that the adopted boy could not claim to share along with the nephew the estate which had belonged to the uncle, notwithstanding the nephew's conduct in reference to the exercise of the power to adopt, inasmuch as the date of this boy's birth rendered it impossible for him, under any circumstances, to have been made an adoptive heir to the uncle. According to Hindu law, as laid down in the decided cases, an adoption effected after the death of a collateral relation does not entitle the adopted son to come in among the heirs of such collateral. BHUBANESWARI DEBI v. A posthumous son, R, was subsequently born to him, who died an infant aged four months. B died in July 1877, aged seven years. The defendant subsequently, on 18th April 1878, adopted the plaintiff. Held, following Jamunabai v. Ratchand, I. L. R., 7 Bom., 225, that the defendant, by adopting the plaintiff, divested herself of the estate of V, to which she had succeeded on the death of B, and that the plaintiff, upon his adoption, became entitled to the property. RAVJI VINAYAKRAV JAGANNATH SHANKARSETT v. not have inherited if the adoption had taken place before the death of the last full owner; but such adopted son is not entitled to claim as preferential heir the estate of any other person besides his adoptive father, when such estate has vested before his adoption in some heir other than the widow who adopts him. Where a man died leaving two widows and having given either of them the power to adopt a son, and the younger widow, on the refusal of the elder one to adopt, adopted a son,—Held that the estate which was in the elder widow was divested by adoption, and that the adopted son took all the estate of his adoptive father. MONDAKINI DAS v. 243. ——— Widow with express authority from her husband to adopt—Adoption by such widow cannot divest estate vested by inheritance devolved from a lineal heir of the husband—Adoption by elder brother's widow after younger brother's death.—K and his two sons, B and N, were members of an undivided family. B died first, leaving a widow; then K died. On his death N succeeded to the family property. N afterwards died, leaving him surviving his widow, the defendant G, who then got possession of the said property. After N's death, however, B's widow adopted the plaintiff as son to her husband, and he brought this suit against G to recover the property from her. He alleged that B in his lifetime, with the concurrence of K, had given express authority to his wife to adopt a son after his death. The Court of first instance gave the plaintiff a decree. On appeal, the District Judge rejected his claim. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court. Held, confirming the decree of the lower Court, that the plaintiff was not, by virtue of his adoption, entitled to oust the defendant G from the estate of her husband. At the time of his death, N was full owner as last survivor of the joint family. The property then devolved as his, and a subsequent adoption, however well authorized to B, a collateral heir of N, could not divest the defendant G, who did not claim through B at all. If the question had arisen between the plaintiff and N, the plaintiff would have been entitled to succeed. Virada Pratapa Raghunada Deo v. Brojo Kishore Patia Deo, I. L. R., 1 Mad., at p. 83; L. R., 3 I. A., at p. 193, referred to. Adoption by a widow under her husband's authority has the effect of divesting an estate vested in any member of the undivided family of which the husband was himself a member. But it does not divest the estate of one on whom the inheritance has devolved from a lineal heir of the husband. This rule, however, must be supplemented by the addition that the adoption, though authorized by the husband, cannot divest the estate vested in a collateral relation of the husband in succession to some other person who had himself become owner in the meantime. CHANDRA v. GOJARABAI. . . I. L. R., 14 Bom., 493

244. ———— Effect of an adoption by a co-widow after the estate has been vested in the other widow—Divesting of estate—Sale in execution of decree—Saleable interest.—A Hindu, governed by Mitakshara law, died, leaving him surviving two widows, G and B, and a son S by G. By a will he authorized his widow, B, to adopt a son, in the event of dying unmarried; but he made no disposition of his property, which was left to devolve according to Hindu law. S died unmarried in the year 1290 (1883), and B adopted a son in the same year, to which adoption G was not a party. In the year 1296 (1889), in order to liquidate debts of their husband, the widows executed a mortgage-bond in favour of one F, who obtained a decree in 1299 (1892). In execution of that decree, the mortgaged properties were sold and purchased by a third party. On an application made by the auction-purchaser to set aside the sale, on the ground that the judgment-debtors had no saleable interest in the property, as it had upon the adoption vested in the adopted son, Held that, as an adopted son is not entitled to claim as preferential heir the estate of any other person besides his adoptive father when such estate has vested before his adoption in some heir other than the widow who adopted him, the adoption by B could not have the effect of divesting G of the estate which had devolved upon her as heir of her son, and if that was so, it could not be said that the judgment-debtors had no saleable interest in the property, and therefore the sale could not be set aside. Held also that G was not under any such religious obligation to give her assent to the adoption by B as should have the effect of divesting her of the estate. Lakshman Dada Nark v. Ramchandra Dada Nark, I. L. R., 5 Bom., 49; L. R., 7 I. A., 18; Bhoochun Moya Debia v. Ram Kishore Acharyee Chowdhry, 3 W. R., P. C., 15; 10 Moore's I. A., 279; *Annammah v. was taken on his death by his widows, and ultimately became vested in L, the survivor of them. In 1871, while she was in possession, V adopted the plaintiff. In 1874, a decision was passed against L, in execution of which a large portion of her deceased husband's property passed into the possession of the defendant. In 1886, the plaintiff filed this suit against the defendant claiming, as the adopted son of V, to be entitled to all the estate of his adoptive grandfather D. Held that he could not recover. His adoption by V, which could only be to her husband C, could not divest L of the estate which had come to her as heir of her husband, D. On D's death, the estate had vested in his widows with remainder to his collateral heirs, and even if L had assented to the subsequent adoption of the plaintiff by V, his claim would not stand against the rights of D's collaterals, who would succeed on D's death. From the moment that D died and his estate vested in his widows, the right of his daughter-in-law V to adopt for the purposes of representation was at an end. DHARNIDHAR v. CHINTO

246. ———— Adoption by widow relating back to husband's death—Divesting of estate of heir who had succeeded before the adoption.—A and S were two divided brothers. A died, leaving his brother S and a daughter-in-law (the widow of his predeceased son G) him surviving. On A's death, S inherited his property as his heir, but shortly afterwards S gave his son M in adoption to the widow of G, who duly adopted him as son to her deceased husband. Held that M on his adoption became not only the son of G, but also the grandson and heir of A. Having been adopted with the assent of S, he, as the adopted grandson of A, divested the estate in A's property which had vested in S. S, by giving M in adoption to G's widow, while divesting M of the right to inherit as his heir, invested him with the right to inherit A's estate. For the purposes of inheritance, an adoption may be considered as relating back to the death of the adoptive father divesting all estates which have during the intermediate period become vested as it were conditionally in another. *ANAJI v. exception to this rule is where a co-widow adopts. Such an adoption will divest the younger widow of her estate. Another exception is where a daughter-in-law adopts with the authority of her father-in-law, who is head of the family, as in Tithaba v. Bapu, (1890) 15 Bom., 110. Unless prohibited expressly or by implication, a widow in the Presidency of Bombay has authority to adopt, but a daughter-in-law, i.e., the widow of a predeceased son, must be specially authorized by her father-in-law in order that she may make a valid adoption binding as against the heirs of her father-in-law. S was the widow of B, who died in 1877 in the lifetime of his father R. Fourteen years later, viz., in 1891, R died, leaving a widow Saibai, who succeeded to his estate as his heir. In March 1892, S adopted the plaintiff G, who was older than herself, as son to her husband, alleging that she had R's permission to do so. The plaintiff sued for a declaration that as adopted son of B he was entitled to succeed as heir to the property of R as against the defendant F, who claimed to have been adopted by Saibai as son to R. The lower Appellate Court disallowed the plaintiff's adoption on the grounds that Saibai had not consented to it. Held (confirming the decree of the lower Court) that, as the adoption of plaintiff G was made by S without proper authority and without Saibai's consent, it was inoperative and invalid. As Saibai did not give her consent to the plaintiff's adoption, that adoption did not divest her of her exclusive right to succeed as heir of R. GOPAL BALAKRISHNA KENJALE v. 249. ——— Adoption of the vesting of inheritance—Dayabhaga law.—One DNL died many years ago leaving him surviving three sons, viz., B L L, the plaintiff, and K C L and T N L, the defendants. He also left him surviving a widow P D, another defendant. The suit was originally instituted against K C L and P D, the plaintiff having omitted to join T N L on the ground that he had been adopted by his uncle H L, and that consequently he had no interest in the properties in suit. But subsequently under an order of the Court T N L was made a co-defendant. The parties were subject to the Dayabhaga law, and the suit was for partition, the main question being as to the effect of the adoption upon the respective shares of the parties. Held that under the Dayabhaga law, when the property descends upon a male owner on the death of the last full owner, he takes therein a full and distinct interest, and in no circumstances is there any abeyance of the rights of property, nor can the property, when once vested, be divested; that therefore, although adoption prior to the vesting of the inheritance entails loss of the right of claiming any share in the estate of the adopted person's natural father or natural relation, yet the interest which is once vested in a son upon the death of his father is not divested by his subsequent adoption into another family; and the parties were accordingly entitled to one-fourth share during the lifetime of the widow and to one-third share absolutely upon her death. Bhoban Moses Debia v. Also that, it having been for the minor's benefit that the widow as guardian should appeal from a decree which had already diminished his estate, the minor was bound by the adverse decree of the Appellate Court, although he had not been made formally a party thereto. The principle of the decision in Dharm Dass Pandey v. Shamasoodary Debi, 8 Moore's I. A., 229, referred to and applied in this case. Held also that the minor, by his adoptive mother as his guardian, was liable in a suit for mesne profits brought after the decree upon title, it being made clear that the suit for mesne profits was substantially brought against the minor. Sureshchander Wam Chowdhry v. was that, as the son first adopted lived to an age sufficiently mature to perform all the acts of spiritual benefit, to secure which the unoomotee potro was executed, and it should be presumed that he performed all those acts, the power given to S ceased to have any operative force. Held that the contention was not supported by the Privy Council cases cited, and was opposed to the general principles of the Hindu law: a son in the situation of the first adopted son in this case cannot exhaust the whole of the spiritual benefit which a son is capable of conferring on his deceased father. RAM SOONDUR SINGH v. 253. — Widow with authority to adopt, Position of—Limitation.—A Hindu died after leaving directions with his widow to adopt a son. On a partition of the joint property among his brothers and widow, a certain property was allotted to the widow as her share; afterwards in 1849 the brother dispossessed her. In 1851 she adopted a son, who attained his majority in 1865, and in 1866 sued for possession of the property. Held that the possession of the widow previous to the adoption was not that of a trustee for the son to be adopted so as to prevent limitation. GOBIND CHANDRA SARMA MAZUMDAR v. 254. — Failure to adopt—Widow with power to adopt not adopting—Suit for estate as widow.—Authority was given by deed, by a childless Hindu in Bengal, to his widow to adopt a son at his decease. The widow did not exercise that power, and many years after her husband's death brought a suit in her character as widow claiming his succession in the family estates. Held that the mere fact of there being authority given her by her husband to adopt a son did not, before an adoption had actually taken place, supersede and destroy her personal right as widow to sue. BAMUNDOBS MOOKERJEE v. TABINNE 7 Moore's L. A., 169

255. — Inheritance, Widow's right to.—A husband's express authorization, or even direction, to adopt does not constitute a legal duty on the part of the widow to do so, and for all legal purposes it is absolutely non-existent till it is acted upon. Adoption by dharm-putr.—Ceremony of dharm-putr.—An adoption made by a Parace immediately before his death would render extremely improbable the execution of a will by him a very short time previous thereto, and therefore call for very clear proof to establish its existence. Although in cases of adoption by dharm-putr (a partial adoption) it is not indispensably necessary that a declaration should be made on the third day after the decease, yet it is usual to make such a declaration and to take a writing from the dharm-putr. In the absence of any such writing, and upon the whole evidence, the adoption in this case was pronounced to be as a paluk-putr, and not merely as a dharm-putr. HOMASRAH v. PUNJABRAH DOSABHEEN

[5 W. R., P. C., 102]

262. Requisition for validity of adoption—Registration—Acknowledgment in writing.—According to Hindu law, neither registration of the act of adoption nor any written evidence of that act having been completed is essential to its validity. In no case should the rights of wives and daughters be transferred to strangers or to more remote relations, unless the fact of adoption by which this transfer is effected be proved by evidence free from all suspicion of fraud, and so consistent and probable as to give no occasion for doubt of its truth. Although the Hindu law does not require that adoptions should be acknowledged in writing, it is usual, when persons in the situation of a zamindar adopt sons, to acknowledge such adoption in writing, to give notice to the ruling power, and to invite the neighbouring zamindars and others to be present at such an adoption. *SUTBOOGY SUTPUTTY v. 263. Deed expressing wish to adopt a particular person.—A cousin and heir to an insane proprietor having been sued for the amount of a decree, and application having been made for execution against the estate of the said proprietor after his death, it was urged that the estate had become the property of a minor who had been adopted by the insane proprietor previously to his decease, and could not be held liable for the debts of the cousin and heir, who, moreover, had formally relinquished his right to it. The plaintiff's claim rested on the contention that the formalities required to validate an adoption had not been attended to in this case. This contention was met by the plea that the adoption was complete, but that, even if it had not been so, a document declaring the deceased proprietor's desire to adopt the minor had the effect of a testament. Held by the High Court that, though the intention of the deceased proprietor to adopt the minor was clear, that intention, even as expressed in the above-mentioned document, which was not testamentary in character, did not amount to an adoption in the absence of the necessary formalities. The estate was accordingly declared liable for the amount of the decree against the cousin and heir. BANER PRERNAD v. COURT OF WARDS

Evidence of conditional adoption.—In a suit in which a claim was made in virtue of an alleged adoption to the estate of a deceased Hindu, the widow made a compromise, not in writing, with the claimant where the adoption was admitted, but alleged to have been on condition that the widow should enjoy the entire property for her life without power of alienation, and that, after her death, her minor daughters should take the self-acquired property, and the claimant should succeed to the ancestral estate. Held that the evidence to establish such a conditional adoption must, as in the case of a nuncupative will, be very strong. *IMRAY KOWAR v. Deed purporting to make adoption—Giving and taking.—An ekranama executed by the natural father in favour of the adoptive father recited that the former had made over his third son to the sonship of the adoptive father, so that the latter might, whenever he would wish, fulfil the rights of adoption in accordance with the Shastras and the usage of the country, and from that day the natural father would have no claim or right in respect of the said son. Held that this deed did not of itself operate to effect an adoption. It did not even amount to a giving and taking of the boy, as it contemplated the subsequent performance of the necessary rites. Held, further, that deeds of this kind did not take the place of the necessary evidence as to the actual adoption. *MANDIR KORB v. Factum of adoption—Onus probandi—Custom among Shatriyas.—The ruling of the Privy Council in Shashinath Ghose v. Krishna Soondari Dasi, L. R., 7 I. A., 260, has no application to a case in which there is ample evidence, both oral and documentary, to prove the factum of adoption. Where it was sought to set aside an adoption which took place many years ago, which had ever since been recognised as valid and under which the adoptee had ever since been in possession of his adoptive father's estate, on the single ground that at the time of the adoption the adopted son was more than five years of age, it was held that the onus of proof was upon the person who alleges the adoption to be invalid. Haimun Chull Singh v. Koomer Gansham Sing, 5 W. R., P. C., 69, referred to. In a case where the validity of an adoption was in dispute and the parties to the suit were Shatriyas, Held that, even if it had been established that five years was the rigid and inflexible limit of age for the validity of all adoptions among the "twice-born" classes, so as to be applicable even to Shatriyas, in the circumstances of the case it would be necessary to have a full investigation of the question whether, among the clan of the Shatriyas to which the parties belonged, any such rigid rule prevailed. *GANGA SAHAJ v. 269. ———— Report of punchayet—Evidence—Family pedigree.—The question was whether a certain adoption was made. It was shown that the dispute had been referred to a punchayet, whose report, dated the 7th February 1819, was filed and preserved in the Collector's office, from whence it was produced. It did not appear whether any formal order was made on the report, and there was not in the record any order of reference or formal statement of the case to show what was the precise subject of decision. But it being clear that a minute local enquiry into the history of the family took place before a competent local tribunal, and also that the disputants signed the report, each saying that he agreed to what is stated in it, it was held that the findings in the report were strong evidence in matters of family pedigree. On a consideration of the evidence and specially of the report of the punchayet, Held (by the Privy Council) that the adoption which was denied by plaintiff was made out. AJASING v. He had three sons, whose posterity continued in three lines till the extinction of the senior line of descendants in 1877. On this, the last of the younger of the two surviving lines claimed to have his right to the succession declared. The question was whether an ancestor of the claimant had adopted as his son a member of the family born in the senior line. The decision depended on the weight to be attached to entries in old documents. These were reports by punchayats to the Collector of the years 1819–21, preserved among the Mamlatdar's records, and they related to questions of succession between the heads of the family lines, disputing them, as were their successors now. The authenticity of the report was not impeached. But the adoption now in question could hardly have been the point then in dispute, and the entries as to it had been tampered with. The enquiry, however, into the history of the family was minute, it took place before a competent local tribunal, and the report was signed by the plaintiff's grandfather. The findings were held strong evidence in matters of family pedigree. The decision of the High Court, which had dismissed the suit (after bringing home the fact of the part obliteration of the entry to the plaintiff), was on the evidence maintained. AJAS SINGH v. Its authority does not depend upon any rule of Hindu law alone, but upon the principles of justice, equity, and good conscience. There is no authority to show that it is to be applied to cases governed by the Hindu law in a manner exceeding the limits recognized by the Roman civil law in which it originated. Its application in cases of adoption should be confined to questions of formalities, ceremonies, preference in the matter of selection, and similar points of moral or religious significance, which relate to what may be termed the modus operandi of adoption, but do not affect its essence. There may be cases where matters which in other systems would be regarded as merely formal, are by the express letter of the texts made matters affecting the essence of the transaction, and such texts may be sufficiently imperative to vitiate an adoption in which they have been disregarded; but unless their meaning is undoubted, the doctrine of factum valet should be restricted to adoptions which, having been made in substantial conformity to the law, have infringed minor points of form or selection. Adoption under the Hindu law being in the nature of a gift, it contains three elements—capacity to give, capacity to take, and capacity to be the subject of adoption—which are essential to the validity of the transactions, and as such are beyond the scope of the doctrine of factum valet. *Uma Deyi v. 1. RESTRAINT ON ALIENATION.

1. — Restraint invalid as inconsistent with Hindu law—Restraint by will.—A restraint on alienation put by a testator on his descendants was considered void as being unknown to, and inconsistent with, Hindu law. NITAI CHARAN PINE v. GANGA DAS

[4 B. L. R., O. C., 235 note

2. — Impartibility, Effect of—Chota Nagpore Raj, Alienation of portion of.—The fact that the Raj of Chota Nagpore is an impartible one does not prevent the Maharaja for the time being from alienating a portion of it in perpetuity. NARAIN KHOTIA v. LOKENATH KHOTIA

3. — Alienation of impartible estate—Custom—Succession to raj.—Impartibility of an inheritance does not, as a matter of law, render it inalienable. The owner of an estate which descends as an impartible inheritance is not, by reason of its impartibility, restricted to making grants or gifts enuring only for his own life. The power of alienation resting upon the general law, inalienability, if existing, must depend upon family custom in this respect, and of such custom proof is required. Anand Lall Singh Deo v. Dheraj Gurs Narain Deo, 5 Moore's I. A., 82, followed. In the case of a titular raj, of which the lately deceased raja had made a mokurari pottah, or grant in perpetuity, of part of the zamindari lands thereto belonging, in favour of a younger son, it was found that the only custom proved was that the raj estate descended to the eldest son, to the exclusion of the other sons, and that there was no proof of a custom prohibiting such an alienation as that made by the grant. Held that the mokurari grant was not invalidated by reason of the raj estate being by custom impartible. UDAYA ADITYA DEB v. JADAB LAL ADITYA DEB . . . I. L. R., 8 Cal., 189

4. ———— Impartible 'raj estate'—Power to alienate—Custom.—In regard to a raj estate in Gorakhpur by custom impartible and descending by primogeniture, the family being in other respects governed by the Mitakshara law, the present Raja's alienation of part of that estate was alleged by his son to be invalid as against him. Held that, if there had been no custom of partibility, the Raja's power over the estate would have been restricted by the law declared in Mitakshara, ch. I, s. 1, v. 27, and the gift would have been void. But there being the above custom, the question was how far the general law was superseded, and whether the right of the son to control the father's act in this respect was beyond the custom. Held that in regard to impartible estate the son's right at birth did not exist where there was no right on his part to partition; also that inalienability depended on custom or on the nature of the tenure. In this case the evidence did not establish that by custom the estate was inalienable. SARTAJ KUARI v. DEORAJ KUARI . I. L. R., 10 All., 272 [L. R., 15 I. A., 51]

5. ———— Custom—Impartible zamindari—Right of zamindar to alienate—Suit to set aside the alienation of impartible property.—The holder of an impartible zamindari governed by the law of primogeniture, having a son, executed a mining lease of part of the zamindari for a period of twenty years, by which no benefit was to accrue to the grantor unless mining operations were carried on with success, and the commencement of mining operations was left optional with the lessee. On the death of the grantor, his minor son and successor, by the Collector of the district as his next friend (authorized in that behalf by the Court of Wards), now sued the assignee of the lessee to have the lease set aside. Held by PARKER, J., MUTTUSAMI AYYAR, J., and WILKINSON, J., that the lease was not one which a managing member of an ordinary joint family governed by Mitakshara law could providently enter into. Per MUTTUSAMI

HINDU LAW—ALIENATION—continued.1. RESTRAINT ON ALIENATION—concluded.

AYYAR and WILKINSON, JJ. (reversing the judgment of PARKER, J.), that in the absence of evidence of any family custom rendering the zamindari inalienable by the zamindar for the time being for purposes other than those warranted by the Mitakshara law, the lease was not invalid as against the plaintiffs. Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari, I. L. R., 10 All., 272, discussed and followed. BERESFORD v. RAMASUBBA

6. ———— Condition not to alienate—Restriction of enjoyment of estate.—Upon a division of family property, the parties to the division entered into an agreement that the property of any one of the parties to the agreement or their heirs dying, leaving no issue, should not be sold or transferred as a gift, but should on his death be divided by the other shareholders. In a suit by one of the shareholders to recover the share to which the plaintiff was entitled under the agreement from the defendant, a purchaser from the son of the person to whom the property was allotted upon the division, Held that an estate cannot be made subject to a condition which is repugnant to any of its ordinary legal incidents, and that the power of disposition, being a legal incident of the estate which passed to the vendor, could not be taken away by the agreement. VENKATRAMANNA v. BRAMMANNA SASTRULU . 4 Mad., 345

7. ———— Alienation and suit by alienee for mutation of names.—On the construction of an ikranama or deed of agreement and partition of an ancestral estate among several brothers, Held that the terms of the deed were not restrictive upon the power of each brother to alienate his separate share. A, one of the brothers, had his share registered on the Collector's books as owner, and by deed of sale conveyed such share to his daughter, who was also his heir. The Collector, on the objection of one of A's brothers (who denied A's right to alienate, on the ground that it was ancestral property), refused to register the daughter's name as proprietor. Held that the Collector was bound by Bengal Regulation VIII of 1800, s. 21, to register her name as purchaser, but that such mutation of name was to be without prejudice to the question of the right of succession. COWULBAS KOONWUN v. LAL BANADUR SINGH . . 9 Moore's I. A., 39

2. ALIENATION BY SON.

8. ———— Alienation without father's consent—Mitakshara law.—Under the Mitakshara law, an alienation by a son without the father's consent is invalid. SHRO RUTUN KOONWAB v. GOVA BEHARSH BEUKUT . . 7 W. R., 449

3. ALIENATION BY UNCLE.

9. ———— Right of nephew to object to alienation.—A nephew is not competent by Hindu law to object to any alienation of ancestral property made by his uncle. ADJODHIA GIN v. KASHIN GIN [4 N. W., 31]

HINDU LAW—ALIENATION—continued.4. ALIENATION BY FATHER.

10. ——— Alienation with consent of son—Right of grandson to object to alienation.—An alienation made by a Hindu with the consent of his son cannot, under the Mitakshara law, be questioned by the grandson. BURAIK CHUTTER SINGH v. GURDHAARE SINGH . . . 9 W. R., 237

11. ——— Grandson's right to set aside alienation—Suit by grandsons, sons of a son adopted in kritrima form to set aside alienation.—Where the son of a certain person, who had been adopted as a kritrima son, sought to set aside certain alienations of self-acquired property which the adoptive father had made, on the double ground that as grandsons they had an interest in that property, and that the alienations were for improper purposes.—Held that, as the alienations were proved to be for legitimate purposes, and the relations established by the kritrima form of adoption were confined to the contracting father and did not extend beyond them on either side, the plaintiffs in this case had no right to set aside the alienations which the adoptive father of their father had made. JUSWANT SINGH v. DOOLER CHUND . . . 25 W. R., 255

12. ——— Self-acquired property—Mithila law—Separate acquisition.—According to Mithila law, the owner of self-acquired property has full power of disposition over it. RISHAN PERKASH NARAIN SINGH v. BAWA MISSEH (12 B. L. R., P. C., 430; 20 W. R., 127)

13. ——— Power of a father of a joint family to alienate—Self-acquired immovables—Mitakshara Law.—A father, being a member of an undivided family subject to the Mitakshara, can exercise full power of disposition at his own discretion over immovables which he has himself acquired, as distinguished from ancestral property. BALWANT SINGH v. RAMKISHORE (I. L. R., 20 All., 297; L. R., 25 I. A., 54)

RAO BALWANT SINGH v. RAMKISHORE (2 C. W. N., 273)

14. ——— Ancestral property—Outcaste, Right of.—There is a distinction between ancestral and self-acquired property under the Mitakshara law with regard to the right of a father to dispose of it. The fact of his being an outcaste would not prevent him from exercising his rights over the property to the same extent as he might otherwise have done. GOODHYA PERSHAD SINGH v. RAMBARUN . . . 6 W. R., 77

15. ——— Ancestral property.—A, a Hindu, sued B, the widow of C, claiming to be entitled with others as heirs of C under the Mitakshara law to certain property. The suit was compromised on the terms, as to one portion of the property, that it was to be retained by B for life, and after her death to be divided according to specified shares between A and the other claimants. After B's death, A obtained possession of his share under the deed of compromise. A alienated the property, and during his lifetime his sons sued to set aside the alienation on the ground that it was ancestral property. Held A took the property absolutely, and not as ancestral property. MAHASIN KOWAR v. JUMRA SINGH (8 B. L. R., 22; 16 W. R., 221)

16. ——— Non-existence of son at date of acquisition.—Suit to recover a share of the property of the plaintiff's maternal grandfather. The facts found were as follows: Plaintiff's mother and 1st defendant's mother were sisters, daughters of one M, who, having no male issue, selected, in pursuance of a special custom, the 1st defendant's father as a son-in-law, who should take his property as if a son. On the death of M, the 1st defendant's father entered into possession of the property, and afterwards, during the minority of his son (1st defendant), associated with himself the plaintiff on promise of a share. In accordance with this agreement, the plaintiff joined the 1st defendant's family, and continued for many years aiding in the management and improvement of the property, until, a short time before the present suit was brought, the 1st defendant turned the plaintiff out of doors and refused to give him the promised share. Upon these facts.—Held by HOLLOWAY and LINES, JJ., that the 1st defendant's father was what is called in English law a purchaser, and had all the powers of disposition existent over self-acquired property; that also there was a complete adoption or ratification of the father's contract by 1st defendant, and that he ought to be held to it. By LINES, J.—That the right of 1st defendant's father to dispose of property self-acquired might depend upon whether 1st defendant was or was not in being at the date of the acquisition. CHALLA PARI RADDI v. CHALLA KOTI RADDI alias KOTAPPA . . . 7 Mad., 25

17. ——— Property inherited by father collaterally—Power of son to prevent alienation.—In execution of a decree against A, a Hindu living under the Mitakshara law, his right, title, and interest in a certain property, part of which he had acquired as heir to his nephew and cousin, was sold. A suit brought by A's sons to obtain possession of their share of the property, on the ground that the debt for which the sale was held had not been incurred under a legal necessity, was dismissed so far as it related to the part of the property which A had inherited collaterally. According to the Mitakshara, a son cannot prevent alienation by his father of property which the latter has inherited collaterally. The restriction upon the father's power of alienation only applies to the grandfather's property. NUND COOMAR LALL v. RAZZOODDEEN HOSSEIN . . . 10 B. L. R., 183; 18 W. R., 477

LOCHUN SINGH v. NAMDHARE SINGH (20 W. R., 170)

18. ——— Right of father in undivided Mitakshara family.—The father in an undivided family under the Mitakshara law has no interest in the ancestral property which can form the subject of a sale beyond his separated share of the proceeds, having merely a life-interest in a common property which he can neither give away nor sell. BYRNO PERAKAD v. BASISTO NARAIN PANDY [16 W. R., 81]

19. — Alienation by man without issue.—Power of the unborn son to contest alienation subsequently.—Held that alienation of property made by a Hindu, who at the time of such alienation has no issue living, cannot be contested by a son who at the time of alienation was neither born nor begotten. MADHO SINGH v. HUMAT ALLY [8 Agra, 432]

JADO SINGH v. BAKER . . . 5 N. W., 113

20. — Ancestral property.—Necessity.—Effecting release from prison.—Ancestral property may be sold by a father to effect his release from prison. DULAK SINGH v. SHREEKISHOR PANDY . . . 4 N. W., 83

21. — Right of son to set aside sale of ancestral property made for his father's debts.—M., a Hindu, who had, on the death of his brother S., succeeded as exclusive proprietor to certain immovable property which had descended to him and S. on the death of their father, and had been held jointly by them, mortgaged the property as security for the repayment of moneys advanced to him by S. R. The debt was not contracted by M. for an immoral purpose. S. R. obtained a decree on the bond hypothecating the property, and in good faith brought the property to sale in execution of the decree and became the bond fide purchaser. Held that a son born to M. after the mortgage-debt was incurred was not entitled to come in and set aside all done under the decree and execution, and recover back a moiety of the estate. SALIG RAM v. LULTA PERAKAD . . . 6 N. W., 329

22. — Illegitimate son.—Assignment for maintenance.—Since by the Hindu law the illegitimate son of a person belonging to one of the "twice-born" classes is entitled to maintenance, an assignment to him by his father, having no legitimate son then born, of a part of his ancestral estate, being in performance of a legal obligation, is on a different footing from a voluntary alienation to a stranger, and is valid under the law of the Mitakshara. Quere—Whether under the Mitakshara law a father who has no child born to him is competent, without legal necessity, to alienate the whole or any part of the ancestral estate, or whether the rights of unborn children are so preserved as to render such an alienation unlawful. PARICMAT v. ZALIM SINGH [I. L. R., 8 Cal., 214]

23. — Power of father over ancestral land.—Gift to daughters.—A Hindu, during the infancy of his son, conveyed certain immovable ancestral property to his wife and married daughters by way of gift. After his death, the son sued by his next friend to have these alienations set aside and to recover the property. Held that the alienations should be set aside altogether. RAYAKMAL v. SUBBASWA . . . I. L. R., 18 Mad., 84

24. — Alienation before birth of son.—Mitakshara law.—Certain property, which had been mortgaged by a Hindu governed by Mitakshara law while yet childless, was subsequently, after the birth of a son, sold in execution of a decree obtained on the mortgage after the birth, in a suit to which the son was not made a party. Held that the son could not disturb the possession of the execution-purchaser. Held also, distinguishing the case of Lachman Dass v. Gridhar Chowdhry, I. L. R., 5 Cal., 855, that in the suit upon the mortgage the son was not a necessary party. DOOLLEE CHAND v. WOONA SUNKUR PURSHAD . . . 7 C. L. R., 429

25. — Right acquired by son in ancestral property on birth.—Mitakshara law.—Inheritance of share in village.—Interest of son acquired on birth.—A mouzah, of which the proprietary right formerly belonged to one zamindar, the ancestor of the plaintiff, was sold, whilst in the possession of the generation succeeding him, for arrears of revenue, and became the property of the Government by purchase. The Government, before the birth of the plaintiff, restored it in four equal shares to the family of the old proprietors, then consisting of four members, one being the plaintiff's father, who thus obtained possession of a five-biwas share. Held that whatever interest the plaintiff as son might have under the Mitakshara law in ancestral property, it could not be said that at the time of his birth there was any proportionate share in the mouzah in which he could by birth acquire an interest, except this five-biwas share. In this suit the plaintiff sought to have set aside, so far as it affected him, a decree, to which his father had consented, declaring his father's right to a five-biwas share only. Held that, even supposing that the father (who was living) might have some right in him to procure an alteration of the grant, such a right was not one in which a son would by his birth acquire an interest. UJAGAR SINGH v. PITAM SINGH . . . I. L. R., 4 All., 120

26. — Right acquired by unborn son.—Right to ancestral property not defeated by will of father.—According to the Hindu law which obtains in the Madras Presidency, the right of a son in the womb to ancestral property cannot be defeated by a will or gift. Quere—Whether this rule would govern the case of an alienation for value. MINAKSHI v. VIRAPPA . . . I. L. R., 8 Mad., 89

27. — Under Hindu law, a son conceived is equal to a son born; accordingly, an alienation by a Hindu to a bond fide purchaser for value is liable to be set aside by a son, who was in his mother's womb at the time of the alienation, to the extent of his share. SABAPATHI v. SOMASUNDARAM [I. L. R., 18 Mad., 76]

28. — Right of son whose share is unaffected.—Purchaser's equity for refund of purchase money.—There is no equity in favour of the purchaser of property belonging to a Hindu family entitling him to a refund of purchase money paid in respect of a share afterwards held to have belonged to

30. — Legal necessity—Ancestral property—Mitakshara law.—To justify an alienation of ancestral property, a legal necessity for the sale must be strictly proved to have existed, and such necessity cannot be inferred from the habits and general character of a vendor. MITTRAJIT SINGH v. RAGHUBHUSI SINGH

Nowrutton Kora v. Goures Dutt Singh
[6 W. R., 193

31. — Alienation by father when binding on son—Burden of proof.—The father of an undivided Hindu family has no power to alienate the son's co-parcenary share in land in the absence of any debt. One claiming merely as the father's vendee must therefore give evidence that the alienation was made for some purpose which would bind the son, or that it was made with his consent. CHINNAYYA v. PERUMAL

[I. L. R., 13 Mad., 51

32. — Mortgage—Loan at time of mortgage—Whether mortgage binding on the property of the mortgagor's undivided son.—In order to justify a sale or a mortgage by a father so as to bind his son's share of the property, there must be in fact an antecedent debt, i.e., a debt prior to the mortgage or sale. Where there was only a loan made at the time of the mortgage, the mortgage was held not to bind the son. SAMI AIYANGAR v. PONNAMMAL

[I. L. R., 21 Mad., 23

33. — Alienation proportionate to the necessity.—The rule that only so much of the property should be sold as will meet the necessity does not apply to cases where the excess is small or where the money really required cannot otherwise be raised. LUCHMEEDHUR SINGH v. EK-BAL AH

[3 W. R., 76

34. — Mitakshara law—Right of son to prevent or set aside alienation by father.—According to the Mitakshara law, a son has an equal right with his father in ancestral property. He can compel the father to divide the property during his lifetime, and any alienation by the father made after the birth of the son, without the consent of the son, unless for a purpose justified by the Hindu law as a legal necessity, will not bind the son. If the father, during the minority of the son, alienated any property in fraud of his creditors, such fraud would not bind the son, who was neither a party nor was privy to such fraud. BREK KISHORE SUNEY SINGH v. HUB BULLUS NARAIN SINGH

[7 W. R., 502

35. — Suit for declaration of future right to a share in joint property.—A member of an undivided Hindu family living under the Mitakshara law in his father's lifetime brought a suit for declaration of his future right to one-sixth share in a portion of the immoveable property of the family, and to set aside an alienation of it by his father, as having been made without legal necessity. Held that no such suit was maintainable. RAOL GORAIN v. TEZA GORAIN

[4 B. L. R., Ap., 90

36. — Consent of son—Property not partible among members of joint family—Custom.—Where, in a part of the country the general law of which is the Mitakshara, a custom exists with regard to ancestral immoveable property that it is not partible among the members of the joint family, but descends from the father to his eldest son, the father cannot alienate such property without the concurrence of his son, unless such alienation is justified by family necessity. RAM NARAIN SINGH v. PERTUM SINGH

[11 B. L. R., 397
[20 W. R., 139

37. — Family distress—Pious purposes—Mitakshara law.—According to the Mitakshara law, a father is not incompetent to sell immoveable property acquired by himself. Landed property acquired by a grandfather, and distributed by him amongst his sons, does not by such gift become the self-acquired property of the sons, so as to enable them to dispose of it by gift or sale without the consent and to the prejudice of the grandson. The sale by a father of ancestral immoveable property, without the concurrence of his sons, is not necessarily void, though it may be avoided, unless the purchaser can show that it was made, during a season of distress, for the sake of the family or for pious purposes. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, it must be assumed that the price received by the father became a part of the assets of the joint family; and therefore, if the son seeks the aid of the Court to set aside the purchase, he must do equity and offer to repay the purchase-money, unless he can show that no part of such purchase-money or the produce of it has ever come to his hands. *MUDDUN GOPAL THAKOOR v. 38. — Alienation without consent of son—Ratification.—In a suit to recover possession of certain ancestral fields, sold during the absence of the defendant, who was united in interest, by his father, to the plaintiff in consideration of money advanced by her out of her stridhan for the purpose of building the family house of which the defendant possessed himself after his father's death, —Held that the defendant, by retaining possession of the house, ratified the act of his father and elected to take the house in lieu of the ancestral fields, the sale of which was declared to be valid and possession thereof given to the plaintiff. GANGADAI v. VAMANAJI DATAN 2 Bom., 301

39. ——— Power of son to control father's alienation of property liable to obstruction—Right of son at birth.—A son cannot control his father's act in respect of a property the succession to which is liable to obstruction. It is only in respect of property not subject to obstruction that the wealth of a father and grandfather becomes the property of his sons or grandsons by virtue of birth. JAWAHIR SINGH v. GUYAN SINGH [3 Agra, 78]

40. ——— Gift by father of joint family of share of ancestral estate, moveable and immoveable.—A Hindu father, while unseparated from his son, has no power, except for purposes warranted by special texts, to alienate to a stranger his undivided share in the ancestral estate, moveable or immoveable. BABA v. TIMMA [1 L. R., 7 Mad., 357]

41. ——— Power of son to set aside alienation—Sale of ancestral property—Judgment-debt—Evidence of necessity.—The sale of a joint ancestral estate for the discharge of a judgment-debt incurred by a father for moneys borrowed by him, which are not shown to have been borrowed for or applied to improper purposes, is not impeachable or voidable by his sons. A judgment-debt is a prima facie proof of necessity. BROWNA v. ROOP KISHORE [5 N. W., 89]

42. ——— Ancestral property—Mitakshara law.—T S, a Hindu, who with his son J N formed a joint Hindu family, subject to the Mitakshara law, executed in favour of D a bond, whereby he professed to pledge a share of certain family property as security for the repayment of money advanced to him by D. Default being made in payment of the loan when due, D brought a suit on the bond against T S, and obtained a decree for the amount secured thereby, in execution of which decree he attached and caused to be sold the right, title, and interest of T S in certain other family property not covered by the bond, and himself became the purchaser thereof, and took exclusive possession of the property. In a suit brought by J N against T S and D to recover possession of the property purchased by D on the ground that no legal necessity existed for the loan, —Held that T S had no individual right to any portion of the property which he could pass to a third person, and therefore J N was entitled to have the alienation set aside and to recover possession of the property. There being nothing amounting to any voluntary representation by T S of his having any right or interest in the property, or any representation of fact made by T S in order to induce D to advance the money, and nothing to show that there was no other property out of which the decree could be satisfied, no equity arose between T S and D such as entitled the

43. ——— Power of father to alienate ancestral property.—F, during the minority of his son R, sold, in order to raise money for immoral purposes, the ancestral property of the family. The purchaser acted in good faith and gave value for such property. Held by the majority of the Full Bench (SPARKLE, J., and OLDFIELD, J.), in a suit by R against the purchaser and F to recover such property and to have such sale set aside as invalid under Hindu law, that such sale was not valid even to the extent of F's share, and that R was entitled to recover such property as joint family property. 45. ——— Mitakshara law—Alienations for joint debts—Waste.—Under the Mitakshara law, according to which the father and son are joint owners of the ancestral estate, the son's power to prevent alienations by the father extends only to acts of waste, and not to alienations for the payment of joint family debts and for the maintenance of the family. BISAMBHUR NAIK v. 46. ——— Liability of son for father's debt—Decree against father—Execution sale—Son's interests when not affected by such sale—Hindu law.—When ancestral property is sold in execution of a decree against a Hindu father, there are only two cases in which the son's interests do not pass under the sale—first, when they are not sold; second, when the debt is not binding upon the sons by reason of its having been contracted for an illegal or immoral purpose. JOHARMAL v. 47. ———— Necessity—
Minor sons Debt contracted to enable father to earn a maintenance.—The expression "family necessity," justifying the sale of ancestral property, must be construed reasonably, and the head of the family and those dealing with him must be supported in transactions which, though in themselves diminishing the estate, yet prevent or tend to prevent still greater losses. A reasonable latitude must be allowed for the exercise of a manager's judgment, especially in the case of a father, though this must not be extended so far as to free the persons dealing with him from the need of all precautions where a minor son has an interest in the property. The fact that a mortgage or a bond, to pay off which ancestral property is sold, had some time to run is not a sufficient reason to disprove an otherwise apparent family necessity. The Hindu law recognizes a debt contracted by the father of a family to enable him to earn a maintenance as one contracted under pressure of a family necessity. BABAJI MAHADASI v. KRISHNAJI DEVJI. I. L. R., 3 Bom., 666

48. ———— Impartible zamindari—Self-acquired property—Zamindari inherited from maternal grandfather.—The course of decisions in the Madras Presidency from 1818 has been to recognize equal ownership by the son in the grandfather's estate, though it may not be divided between the father and the son, and to uphold the father's alienation only to the extent of his share. Semble—The decision in Gridharee Lall's case, 14 B. L. R., 147, was not intended to vary the course of decisions in this presidency. Semble—The doctrine of the pious duty of the son to pay his father's debts does not apply in the case of an impartible zamindari, where the son is not able to protect his interest as in the case of ordinary property by electing a division. MUTTAYAN CHETTI v. ZAMINDAR OF SIVAGIRI [I. L. R., 3 Mad., 370

But,—Held on appeal to the Privy Council, which reversed the decision of the High Court, that the estate which a son takes by heritage from his father constitutes assets by descent for the payment of his father's debt not incurred for any immoral or vicious purpose. This estate may be attached and sold in execution of a decree upon such a debt, and that it is an impartible zamindari does not alter the case. The principle that the ancestral property, in which the son acquires an interest by birth, is liable for the father's debt, unless within the above exception, holds good by the Mitakshara law as administered in Madras as well as in Bombay and Bengal. Gridharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall, 14 B. L. R., 147; L. R., 1 I. A., 321, referred to and followed. Part of an impartible zamindari inherited from a maternal grandfather was hypothecated by the zamindar as security for a debt not within the above exception. Held that all the right, title, and interest which had come to his son by heritage from the indebted zamindar, as well in the hypothecated part as in the rest of the zamindari, were liable, so far as they had not been administered in payment of the father's debt, to be attached and sold in execution of a decree against the father, based on his admission of the debt. A zamindari inherited from a maternal grandfather is not "self-acquired" property. Quere—Whether the zamindar, having inherited from his maternal grandfather, was under the same restriction, in reference to alienation as against the son, as he would have been if the property had come through the male line. MUTTAYAN CHETTI v. BANOLI VIRA PANDIA CHINNATAMBIAH. I. L. R., 3 Mad., 1 [I. R., 9 I. A., 128; 12 C. L. R., 169

49. ———— Ancestral property—Son's share—Rights of co-parceners—Purchaser, Right of.—Under the law of the Mitakshara, each son upon his birth takes a share equal to that of his father in ancestral immovable estate, and can compel his father to make partition of such estate. The rights of the co-parceners in a joint Hindu family consisting of a father and his sons do not differ from those of the co-parceners in a like family consisting of undivided brethren, except in so far as the sons are affected by the obligation of the Hindu law to pay their father's debts, and by the fact that he is naturally the manager of the joint family estate. It is settled law in the Madras Presidency that one co-parcener may dispose of ancestral undivided estate to the extent of his own share, even by private conveyance, whether for value or by gift. In the Bombay Presidency, unauthorized alienations, voluntarily made by one co-parcener, are good, even for his own share, only when made for value. In Bengal, the law which prevails in the other Presidencies as to alienation by private deed has not yet been adopted, but it is now settled that the purchaser of undivided property, sold in execution of a decree during the life of the debtor for his separate debt, acquires the debtor's interest in such property, with the power of ascertaining and realizing it by partition. Under the Hindu law, subject to certain limited exceptions, the whole of the undivided estate of a joint family is liable in the hands of sons for the debts of their father. Accordingly, where ancestral property has passed out of the family either under a conveyance executed by the father in consideration of an antecedent debt, or in order to raise money to pay off an antecedent debt, or under a sale in execution of a decree for the father's debt, his sons, by reason of their duty to pay their father's debts, cannot recover that property, unless they show that the debts were of a kind for which they would not have been liable, and that the purchasers had notice to that effect; and a purchaser at an execution-sale, being a stranger to the suit without such notice, is not bound to make enquiry beyond what appears on the surface of the proceedings. In a suit by the members of an undivided Hindu family governed by the law of the Mitakshara to set aside a sale of joint ancestral property which had been sold in execution of a decree obtained against their deceased father, on the ground that the debt was not one for which such property could be made liable, it appeared that prior to the sale the plaintiffs had preferred a claim of objection thereto on the same grounds, and that the Court of execution had declined to adjudicate the claim, and had directed the sale to proceed, referring the claimants to a regular suit. Held that the purchasers at the execution-sale must be taken to have had notice, actual or constructive, of the objections made to the sale by the plaintiffs, and of the order passed thereon by the Court, and to have purchased with knowledge of the plaintiffs' claim, and subject to the result of their suit. Held also that, the property having been attached for the debt of a co-sharer during his lifetime, the sale was good for his share, but that, as it appeared on the evidence in the suit that the debt was one for which, according to Hindu law, the other co-sharers could not be made liable, the sale was not good for their shares. SURAJ BUNSI KOER v. BHOO PERSAD SINGH. I. L. R., 5 Cal., 146 [4 C. L. R., 226 L. R., 6 I. A., 68

50. Alienation of joint undivided family property by father—Rights of sons.—Z, a member of a joint Hindu family consisting of himself and his sons, in January 1869, in order to raise money to pay off family debts and for family necessities, conveyed a two-anna share out of an eight-anna share of a village belonging to the family to B, who sued him on such conveyance for possession of the two-anna share, and obtained a decree and possession of such share. In June 1879, the sons and the grandson of Z sued B to recover such share. Held, with reference to the ruling of the Privy Council in Suraj Bansi Koer v. Shoo Persad Singh, I. L. 51. Minor sons—Adult sons—Necessity for alienation.—A, the father and managing member of a Hindu family subject to Mitakshara law, executed bonds mortgaging a portion of the ancestral estate to the father of the defendants. At the date of the mortgages A had living a wife and two sons, one of whom was alleged to be an adult and the other a minor. The mortgagees instituted suits on the bonds, making A only a defendant, and in execution of decrees obtained by him in those suits, four portions of ancestral property were attached and sold by the Court, the sale-certificates being of the right, title, and interest of the judgment-debtor, and were purchased by the mortgagee, who got possession of the whole sixteen annas of the four portions of ancestral estate sold. In a suit by the widow and the two sons of A to recover their shares in the property from the representatives of the mortgagee, Held that, as A alone executed the mortgages and was alone made a defendant in the suits on the bond, the sale in execution as against the minor could pass the entire sixteen annas of the estate only in the event of the defendants proving that sufficient necessity existed for incurring the debt; if no necessity was proved, only the right, title, and interest of A passed by the sale, although the loans might have been applied by him to immoral purposes, and the sons might, if properly proceeded against, have been bound to pay A's debt. As against the adult son, only the right, title, and interest of A would pass unless necessity were shown. Quere—Whether, even if necessity were proved, the interests of adult members of the family could be affected without their consent. Where, upon a sale under a decree obtained upon a mortgage-bond against the father of a Mitakshara family, property other than that included within the mortgage-bond is sold, such sale only passes the right, title, and interest of the father. The principles laid down in the cases of Gridharoo Lall v. Kantoo Lall, 14 B. L. R., 187; Suraj Bansi Koer v. Shoo Persad Singh, I. L. R., 5 Cal., 148; and *Deendgal Lall v. 52. Joint Hindu family—Joint family property—Joint family debt—Execution of decree against father—Rights of sons.—R, a Hindu father, gave certain persons a bond in which he hypothecated the joint undivided property of his family. Such persons obtained a decree against R on such bond, in the execution of which "such rights and interests only as R had as a Hindu father in a joint undivided family" were put up for sale. Held that, although R might have as a Hindu father a power of dealing with the interests of his sons, that circumstance would not make such interests his own, so as to pass them by a sale which affected his own interests only, and the auction-purchasers could be held only to have purchased his interests. NAKHAJ JOTI v. 53. Joint Hindu family—Joint family debt—Sale of joint family property in execution of decrees.—When a member of a joint Hindu family is sued for a family debt, it may be assumed that he is sued for the same as the representative of the family; and when the decree in such a suit is substantially one in respect of the family debt and against the representative of the family, such decree may properly be executed against the family property. Held therefore (STRAIGHT, J., dissenting), where the father of a joint Hindu family, as the representative of the family, borrowed money for family purposes, hypothecating family property for the repayment of such money, and in a suit to recover such money by the sale of such property and other family property a decree was made against him, directing the sale of the hypothecated property and such other property, and such properties were sold in execution of such decree, that, having regard to these facts, it was reasonable to hold that the father was sued as the representative of the family, and such decree was made against him in that capacity, and was so executed against him, and consequently his sons were not entitled to recover their legal shares of such properties from the auction-purchaser. Bhissar Lall Sahoo v. As manager of such business, he contracted certain debts, for which he was sued as the "proprietor" of the firm of "Atma Ram Anokhe Lal," and for which decrees were passed against him in execution of which ancestral property of the family was sold. L, his minor son, sued to have such sale set aside and to recover his share of such property on the ground that such decrees had been passed against his father personally and only his interests in such property passed by such sale. Held that, looking at the capacity in which N was sued and the nature of the debts for which such decrees were given, such decrees must be taken to have been passed against N as the managing head of the family, and L was therefore not entitled to recover his share of such property. *PHUL CHAND v. 55. Mitakshara law—Ancestral property—Sale of joint family property—Debts legally contracted by father—Sale in execution of decree.—There is no foundation either in the Mitakshara law itself or in any decisions passed by the Judicial Committee for the broad proposition that in all cases under a sale in execution of a money-decree against the father in a joint family, consisting of a father and sons, whether adults or minors, nothing but the father's share passes. The result of an examination of the leading cases on the subject is, that in each such case the question as to what was sold in execution must be first determined (the mere circumstance that a decree was obtained against the father alone is not conclusive upon the point), and it should further be enquired whether the father was sued in his representative capacity or not, and if not so sued, then whether the sons are entitled to set aside the sale qua their shares. The decision of the Privy Council in Deen Dyal Lal v. Jagdeep Narain Singh, I. L. R., 3 Cal., 198, in no way conflicts with the principle laid down in the case of Muddan Thakoor v. Kantoo Lal, 14 B. L. R., 187. UMBICA PRASAD TILWARY v. RAM SANY LAL

Assignee—Title of purchaser—Rights of son.—A father and son were possessed of immovable ancestral property consisting of certain houses. The father, becoming insolvent, took the benefit of the Insolvent Act; and the usual vesting order, under s. 7 of the Insolvent Act, 11 & 12 Vict., s. 21, was thereupon made. Shortly afterwards the father died, and soon after his death the Official Assignee sold the houses in question to the defendant in order to raise money to pay off the deceased insolvent's debts. The son now brought a suit to recover the whole or a portion of the said houses, contesting the right of the Official Assignee to convey any interest, or at least his interest in the said houses, to the purchaser. Held that the sale was valid, and conveyed to the purchaser the interest of the plaintiff as well as that of his deceased father. Under the Mitakshara law, a father has the right to dispose of his son's interest in ancestral immovable estate for the payment of his own debts not contracted for immoral purposes; and a vesting order made under s. 7 of the Insolvent Act vests that right in the Official Assignee, who can therefore give a good and complete title to such ancestral immovable estate to a purchaser. The death of the insolvent had no effect on the proceedings in his insolvency or on the power of the Official Assignee. The ancestral estate previously vested in the Official Assignee was not therefore divested from him, and vested in the son by right of survivorship. Semble—In the event of the father's estate producing a surplus over and above the amount required to satisfy his debts, such surplus might be made available to answer the claims of the son in respect of his interest in ancestral immovable property sold in the realization of the father's estate. *FAKIRCHAND MOTICHAND v. 57. Mithila law—Son's interest in ancestral estate.—Ancestral property which descends to a father under the Mithila law is not exempted from liability to pay his debts because a son is born to him. Such exemption can only be pleaded when the nature of the debts incurred by the father is such as would free the son from the usual obligation of discharging his father's debts out of the ancestral estate. A decree properly obtained against the father can be executed by sale of such ancestral estate, and the interests of the sons as well as of the father will be bound by it. A purchaser at such sale is not bound to enquire into the circumstances under which the decree was made. GIRDHAR LALL v. KANTOO LALL MUDDAN THAKOOR v. KANTOO LALL 14 B. L. R., 187 [22 W. R., 56; I. 58. Son's interest in the ancestral estate.—The interest which a son by birth acquires in the ancestral estate of his father under the Mitakshara law does not entitle him to claim exemption from all debts contracted by the father subsequent to his birth. Such exemption can only be claimed when the debts are of an illegal nature, or have been contracted for immoral purposes. An alienation made by the father by way of mortgage or sale for the discharge of a debt for which the property would be ultimately liable falls within the meaning of the unavoidable transactions spoken of in paras. 28 and 29, a. 1, Ch. I of the Mitakshara. MUDDUN GOPAL LALL v. GOWRNBUTTY, GIRDHARI LALL SAHOO v. GOWRNBUTTY, POOSUN LALL SAHOO v. GOWRNBUTTY

60. Nature of debts.—In a suit to set aside a sale of ancestral property in which it was contended, firstly, that the debt in satisfaction of which the sale had taken place was contracted for an immoral purpose; secondly, that a debt might be immoral either in respect of the object for which it was contracted or in respect of the means by which the money was obtained; and, thirdly, that in any case the judgment-debtor could only sell his own half interest, and not the half interest which his son had in the property.—Held that, as the debt represented liabilities which the judgment-debtor had incurred in making bond fide for his employer a contract which that employer had repudiated, it was properly binding on his son; and that the son's inchoate interest in the property, which would ripen on the father's death, was not a separate half interest in the estate, the father's whole interest in which had passed in the sale. WAJID HOSSEIN v. NANKOO SINGH.

[25 W. R., 311]

61. Right of son to set aside alienation—Immorality.—Following a ruling of the Privy Council, Gridharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall, 14 B. L. R., 187, it was held that a bond fide purchaser, for valuable consideration, of ancestral property sold in execution of a decree is not bound to go further back than to see that there was a decree, and that the property was liable to satisfy the decree. Where this is done, the heirs of the deceased judgment-debtor are not entitled to come in and set aside the proceedings and recover the property. A son's freedom from obligation to discharge his father's debt has respect to the nature of the debt, and not to the nature of the property, whether ancestral or acquired. If the debt of the father had been contracted for any immoral purpose, the son might not be under any pious obligation to pay it. Attending nautes, and occasionally giving nautes at one's own expense, cannot be considered immorality absolving from such obligation. BUDRE LALL v. KANTER LALL.

62. Mitakshara law—Son's interest in ancestral estate—Burden of proof.—In a suit by a son to set aside an alienation of property made by his father during the son's minority, it was shown that the property in suit originally belonged to the plaintiff's grandfather, who came to a partition of his property with his brother; and that, on the death of the plaintiff's grandfather, his two sons, the father and uncle of the plaintiff, divided the estate between them, the property in suit falling to the share of the plaintiff's father. It was sought to set aside the alienation on the ground that there was no legal necessity for effecting it. The suit was brought seven or eight years after the plaintiff attained his majority. Held that, notwithstanding the partition by the plaintiff's father, the property was ancestral property in which the plaintiff at his birth acquired an interest. Held also, reversing the decision of the Courts below, that the question to be tried in the suit was, according to the decision of the Privy Council in Gridharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall, 14 B. L. R., 187, not whether there was any legal necessity for the alienation, but whether the debt of the father, in satisfaction of which the alienation was made, was incurred for an immoral purpose, and that, under the circumstances, the onus was on the plaintiff to show that it was. Quære—Is a son bound to discharge debts of the father which are illegal, though not immoral? ADURMONI DEVI v. 63. Sale in execution of personal decrees, of decrees to enforce mortgage against father—Son's right to set aside sale.—R., the father of an undivided Hindu family, borrowed Rs 700 from P in 1867, and executed a mortgage-bond hypothecating family property to secure the debt. In suit No. 198 of 1876 P recovered judgment against R for Rs 1,229 and costs, and the lands mortgaged were declared by the decrees to be liable for the debt. In 1876 the plaintiff, one of R's sons, brought a partition suit (No. 622) against his father to obtain his share of the family property. P intervened, and was made a party. In 1877 P took out execution of his decree, and the mortgaged property was brought to sale and purchased by P for Rs 1,200, and a sale certificate was issued under s. 259 of Act VIII of 185., declaring the sale of the right, title, and interest of the judgment-debtor in the property mentioned therein confirmed. In suit No. 622 it was not alleged by the plaintiff that the debt was contracted by his father for purposes which would excuse a son from his obligation to pay it, but the amount which remained due on the bond of 1867 was disputed and not determined by the Munsif, who held that P only acquired by his purchase the father's share in the land under the authority of Deendyal Lall's case, 1. L. R., 3 Cal., 199, or by the Subordinate Judge, who held, on the authority of Girdharree Lall's case, 14 B. L. R., 167, that the plaintiff's claim against P was invalid, considering the decree against the father sufficient evidence of the debt. R also borrowed Rs 50 from A, and in 1872 executed a mortgage-bond hypothecating other family lands to him as security. In 1876 A brought a suit (No. 35) against R to recover the amount due on the bond from R personally and by sale of the mortgaged land, and in 1877 the mortgaged lands were sold in execution of the decree and a certificate issued, in the same form as in P's suit, to A. A also intervened in the partition suit, and was made a party. The amount due by R to A, secured by the mortgage, was not disputed, nor was it alleged that the debt was contracted for immoral purposes. The lower Courts decided the plaintiff's claim against A in the same way as his claim against P. Held (JENKS and MUTTUSAMI AYYAR, JJ., dissenting) that the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Girdharree Lall v. Kantoo Lall, 14 B. L. R., 167, is binding on and must be followed by the Courts in this Presidency, and that the liability of a son to discharge his father's debts is commensurate with the whole interest the son takes in the ancestral as well as in the self-acquired property of his father. Held also that it was necessary to determine whether the amount alleged by P remained due on the bond of 1876, because, if it was established by the plaintiff that the debt was substantially less than it was asserted to be, the plaintiff might have a claim to equitable relief, inasmuch as the decree-holder brought the land to sale after the institution of the partition suit. Held, lastly, that if the sale to A was made in execution of so much of the decree as was purely personal, the plaintiff's claim was properly dismissed as against A, but if the sale was made in execution of the order for the enforcement of the mortgage, it could not bind the plaintiff, inasmuch as it was the duty of the mortgagee to make plaintiff a party to suit No. 35 and afford him an opportunity of redemption, but that, if the sale was set aside, the plaintiff could not claim to be placed in a better position than he would have occupied had the sale not taken place, and that, as his interest was bound by the mortgage, he would hold that interest subject to a proportionate part of the mortgage-debt. Per TUNNA, C.J.—The obligation under the ancient Hindu law of the son and grandson to discharge the debt of the father and grandfather has been preserved, while the power of the father to deal with ancestral immovable property has been curtailed. A personal obligation arising from the filial relation and independent of assets exists as well as an obligation attaching to the heritage in the hands of lineal descendants of the debtor. The question as to the extent of the son's liability is not one of contract, but the duty is an incident of inheritance. Assets available for the payment of a father's debts mean and include the whole estate in which the son by birth acquired rights. The validity of an alienation to a purchaser for consideration in Bombay, as in Madras, did not originate in any local usage, but in an exceptional doctrine established by modern jurisprudence. The duty of the son is incidental to the heritage and subsists from the inception of the son's interest therein. As a father can make a valid alienation of ancestral property so as to bind the son's interest, the law will execute the father's power for the benefit of creditors. There are substantial differences between a sale in execution for a money decree and a sale under a decree ordering a sale to enforce a mortgage. In the former case the Court proposes to sell whatever interest in the property would, under any circumstances, be available to creditors at the date of the attachment; in the latter case, whatever interest the mortgagor was, under any circumstances, competent to create and intended to create at the time of the mortgage. Although a son's interest may pass by a sale in execution of a decree in a suit to which he was no party, yet the son is not concluded by the decree. It is competent to him to contest the sale in subsequent proceedings on any grounds which, had he been a party, he might have advanced to protect his interest. Per JENKS, J.—The question of the extent of the liability of the son is a question of contract and not a question of succession, and to be determined not by Hindu law, but by the statute law or the law of equity and good conscience. Since 1837 the decisions in Madras have determined that the liability of the son exists only to the extent he may have taken assets. According to the Mitakshara, the son has property by birth in the estate of his grandfather, and since 1812 the right to alienate his share without the consent of his co-parceners has been established. The father cannot leave assets in the property of his son. The share of the father in ancestral estate does not accrue to the son by survivorship instead of becoming available as assets, because of the rule of Hindu law which requires the taker of wealth, whether by survivorship or inheritance, to discharge the debts. The decision in Girdharree Lall's case cannot alter the law as to rights in property so as to make the son's interest the father's estate. Until the decision in Girdharree Lall's case, the son's freedom from liability to pay the father's personal debt in the father's lifetime was universally supposed to exist, and that decision ought not to be followed in the Madras Presidency so far as it lays upon the son the duty of discharging his father's debt in his lifetime, or so far as it limits the son's right to question charges made by the father upon the family property to the case of debts immorally contracted. The rule laid down in Saraswata Tevan v. Muttayi Ammal, 6 Mad., 371, should be followed, and when a decree is against the father for his separate debts, the purchaser of ancestral property under the decree takes at most only the share or interest to which the father was entitled at the date at which the charge was created. Per MUTTUSAMI AYYAR, J.—The power of a Hindu father to sell ancestral lands is limited. The rights of co-parceners in an undivided Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara, which consists of a father and sons, do not differ from those of co-parceners in a family which consists of undivided brothers, except so far as they are affected by the peculiar obligation which the Hindu law imposes on sons of paying their father's debts. The son's duty to pay his father's debts is, according to the ancient text, a legal obligation, because it was enforced compulsorily by Hindu kings through their Judges, who exercised an ecclesiastical as well as a secular jurisdiction. Since 1837 in this Presidency it has been considered that, when no assets were inherited, the question of the son's liability for the father's debts was one of contract and governed, under Madras Regulation III of 1802, not by Hindu law, but by the rule of equity and good conscience. There is no case decided in the Madras Presidency before Girdhars Lall's case in which the son's obligation was not treated as a mere moral duty. But, granting that the judgment may be enforced as a legal obligation, it would be a good defence under the ancient Hindu law for the son to plead that the obligation could not arise in his father's lifetime to pay a debt contracted by the father for his own purposes. The decision in Girdhars Lall's case ought not to be followed in this Presidency—(1) because of the peculiar view which has prevailed, as to the nature of the pious obligation, for more than forty years; (2) because of the doctrine of alienability of undivided interest which has been generally recognized as a matter of equity for more than sixty years, and as a matter of right for upwards of twenty years; (3) because the son's right of interdiction and power to defraud creditors, provided by the Mitakshara, have been taken away by recognising that an undivided interest is on the footing of the co-parcener's separate property for the purpose of satisfying his obligations; (4) because it is desirable to wait for an authoritative ruling by the Privy Council in a Madras case before unsettling the law. In the procedure followed in suits brought against a Hindu father by his creditors, there is nothing special to warrant a fictitious extension of the parties. There is no legal basis for any distinction between a decree in which there is a direction for the sale of mortgaged property and a simple money decree. The interest that passes by a Court sale must be determined with reference to the decree that led to it, and cannot be determined by a future inquiry as to the character of the debt. The son's interest does not pass by reason of the direction for the sale of the mortgaged property. Per KERNAN, J.—A sale or mortgage by a father alone of ancestral property, after the birth of a son, for the purpose of raising money, not for family necessity or benefit, but to pay a debt incurred by the father, not for immoral consideration, binds the son and his interest at birth, and from this it necessarily follows that the obligation of the son arises and may be made effectual against the son in the lifetime of the father. Per KIRKPATRICK, J.—The obligation of the son to pay his father's debt is a part of the law of inheritance, not of contract. According to the true doctrine of the Hindu law, the obligation of the son to pay his father's debt does not arise until the father's death. It is the duty of the father to pay his own separate debts, but the decision in Girdhars Lall's case goes further, and rules that even in the undivided father's lifetime, when there has been a decree against the father for debts which were neither immoral nor illegal, and ancestral immovable property has been sold in execution of such decree or under pressure of such execution, the son cannot recover against a bona fide purchaser for value. The decision in Girdhars Lall v. Kantoo Lall should not be carried beyond the circumstances upon which the decision was passed. PONNAPPA PILLAI v. PAPPUVAITANGAR. I. L. R., 4 Mad., 1

64. Alienation for family purposes—Sale in execution of decree against father—Suit by son to set aside sale.—When a mortgage-debt has been contracted for family purposes by the father, and a decree passed against him and family property sold in satisfaction of the decree, the son cannot sue for his share of the property sold on the ground that he was no party to the suit. The ruling in Girdhars Lall v. Kantoo Lall, 14 B. L. R., 187, affirmed in Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Prasad Singh, I. L. R., 5 Cal., 148, must be followed in accordance with the decision in the Full Bench ruling in Ponnappa Pillai v. Pappurayyengar, I. L. R., 4 Mad., 1. SUNDRABAJA AYYANGAR v. JAGANADA PILLAI

[I. L. R., 4 Mad., 111]

65. Sale in execution of decree against father—Right of sons to set aside sale.—Per Curiam (JAMES and MOTTUSAMI AYYAR, JJ., dissenting).—In the Madras Presidency, where ancestral property has been bought at a sale in execution of a decree against the father of a Hindu family, the purchaser is not bound to go further back than to see that there was a decree against the father, and that the property was properly liable to satisfy the decree if the decree had been properly given against the father. A bona fide purchaser for valuable consideration of an estate purchased in execution of a decree against the father under such circumstances is protected against the suit of the sons seeking to set aside all that has been done under the decree and execution, and to recover back the estate as part of ancestral property. Girdhars Lall v. Kantoo Lall, 14 B. L. R., 187, followed. SIVASANKARA MUDALI v. PARVATI ANNI. I. L. R., 4 Mad., 96

66. Sale of family property by father—Right of son to set aside sale.—In the Madras Presidency a sale of ancestral land by an undivided Hindu father to procure funds for the satisfaction of debts incurred by himself must be sustained as against the sons on the authority of the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Girdhars Lall v. Kantoo Lall, 14 B. L. R., 187; but when the case is also disputed by a (minor) co-parcener not a son, but a nephew (the sale-deed having been executed by his uncle and his mother ad hoc facto guardians), the ruling in Girdhars Lall's case is not applicable, and the purchaser must show, in addition to the fact that the debts existed at the time of the sale, that the debts were such as it was incumbent on the minor to discharge. *GANGULU v. K offered to abide by the oath of T, and a decree was passed in T's favour declaring him entitled to a one-sixth share of the land, jewels, and money, and to mesne profits and interest. In execution of this decree, T attached lands belonging to K and his sons who had remained in union. The attachment was raised on the intervention of the sons of K. Held, in a suit to declare the shares of the sons of K liable for the decree against K, that the rule in Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall, 14 B. L. R., 187; L. R., 1 I. A., 321, was not applicable,

It was not proved that the mortgage-debt was incurred for the benefit of the family, nor was it proved that it was incurred for immoral or illegal purposes by the father. Held that the mortgage was only binding on the father's one-fourth share, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover one-fourth of the property mortgaged from the mortgagee. YENAMANDRA SITARAM ASAMI v. 73. ———— Debt properly contracted—Usurious rate of interest—Purchaser at execution sale of joint family property.—In a suit by a Hindu subject to the Mitakshara law, against certain auction-purchasers at a sale in execution of a decree against the father, to recover a portion of the ancestral estate by cancellation of the sale, it appeared that the property which was mortgaged by the bond upon which the decree was passed was not put up for sale. The decree provided "that the plaintiff recover the amount with costs and interest, and that the decree be executed against the property specified in the bond," and it also allowed interest at about 50 per cent., the rate in the bond, to the decree-holders. It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that, upon a proper construction of the Privy Council ruling in Muddun Thakoar v. Kantoo Lall, 14 B. L. R., 187, the decree under which the property had been sold was an improper one. Held that, under the Privy Council ruling, the purchaser is not bound to look beyond the decree. Held also that an usurious rate of interest cannot be treated, within the principles of the above case, as showing that the decree was for a debt which the son was not bound to discharge. LUCKMI DAI KOORI v. 74. ————— Son's interest in ancestral property—Mortgage by father during minority of sons.—A Hindu, subject to the Mitakshara law and forming with his sons a joint Hindu family, mortgaged certain ancestral immovable property during the minority of his sons. In a suit by the mortgagee against the father and sons to recover the mortgage debt "by sale of the mortgaged property, and out of other properties, as well as from the person" of the father, —Held that it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to show for what purpose the loan was contracted, and that that purpose was one which justified the father in charging, or which the plaintiff had at least good grounds for believing did justify the father in charging, the sons' interests in the ancestral immovable property. *BHAKNARAIN SINGH v. 75. ————— Alienation by father to pay off antecedent debt.—An alienation of joint family property made by a father under the Mitakshara law for the purpose of paying off an antecedent debt is binding upon the sons, unless they show that the debt was contracted for immoral purposes. The case of Bhagnarain Singh v. Januk Singh, I. L. R., 2 Cal., 436, being opposed to the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Girdhars Lal v. Kantoo Lal, L. R., 1 I. A., 821, as explained by that of Ram Sakai v. Sheo Prasad Singh, I. L. R., 5 Cal., 148; L. R., 6 I. A., 88, cannot now be followed. GUNGA PRASAD v. SHRODYAL SINGH [5 C. L. R., 224

76. ————— The manager of a joint Mitakshara family (the family consisting of the father and minor son) raised money on the mortgage of certain family property, it not being proved, on the one hand, that there was legal necessity for raising the money, nor, on the other hand, that the money was raised or expended for improper purposes, or that the lender made any enquiry as to the purpose for which the money was required. Held that, under such circumstances, a mortgagee could not enforce, by suit against the father and son, the mortgage itself during the father's lifetime, but the debt being an antecedent one, he would simply be entitled to a decree directing the debt to be raised out of the whole ancestral estate, including the mortgaged property. He would, assuming the minor to be the only son, also be entitled to a similar decree against the son after the father's death. Supposing the mortgagee, under the above circumstances, to have obtained a decree against the father alone for payment and sale of the property, and at the sale to have himself become the purchaser, he could not be considered a bona fide purchaser for value, and would not be entitled to the property as against the infant son, except to the extent of the father's interest therein. A mortgagee, under the same circumstances (but supposing the son to have attained majority at the time of the loan, and to have been made a party to the suit), would be entitled to a decree directing the debt to be raised out of the whole ancestral estate. In the case of a joint Mitakshara family consisting of two brothers and their two minor sons, the former, being the managers, raised money by executing a surpeshgi lease of specific family property, the lender making no enquiry as to the necessity for the loan; subsequently such managers took a sub-lease of the same property from the surpeshgidar and continued in possession, and the surpeshgidar sued for rent and obtained a decree, and in execution became the purchaser and obtained possession. It was found as a fact that the surpeshgi and the sub-lease were merely a device by the managers to raise money and to continue in possession of the property, but it was not shown for what purpose the money was raised. Held the minor sons, not having been made parties to the suit by the surpeshgidar, would be entitled to recover their shares against the purchaser. LUCKMAN DASS v. GIRIDHAR CHOWDHRY [I. L. R., 5 Cal., 855; 8 C. L. R., 473

77. ————— Mitakshara law.—Under Mitakshara law, according to the rulings of the judicial committee, the payment, even in the father's lifetime, of an antecedent debt due by him is a pious duty on the part of the son, and its discharge is therefore such a necessary purpose as to give validity to a sale or mortgage by the father as against his minor sons. Such antecedent debt means a debt antecedent to the transaction, viz., the sale or mortgage purporting to deal with the property. In a suit upon a mortgage by the father alone, where the sons are made parties, the decree would be good as against the sons, even though they may have been adult when the debt (assuming it was not for immoral purposes) was incurred, and the whole property would be bound, notwithstanding v. 29, chap. I, s. i, and v. 10, chap. I, s. vi of the Mitakshara. In respect of ancestral property the son is equally liable for his father's debts, if not incurred for immoral purposes, as for his own debts. The interest of an adult son, however, could not ordinarily be affected by a decree against the father alone. Where, however, an adult son, although neither an executant of the bond on which the suit was brought nor a party to such suit, yet was shown to be himself liable for a large proportion of the antecedent debt due on the bond, and by his conduct had made it apparent that he approved of and fully acquiesced in the sale of the whole ancestral property, and, moreover, that he allowed the mortgagee to take and remain in possession for upwards of eleven years and to go to expense in paying off encumbrances on the estate, it was, in a suit by the son to recover his share of such ancestral property, held that he was not entitled to succeed. Under the circumstances, the son ought to have been made a party to the suit brought by the mortgagee. The principles laid down by the Privy Council and in the Full Bench case of Luckman Dass v. Giridhar Chowdhry, I. L. R., 5 Cal., 855, by the High Court, discussed. LALJIJI SAKOI v. FAKIR CHAND [I. L. R., 6 Cal., 135; 7 C. L. R., 97

family purposes—Attachment of property in execution of decree—Death of judgment-debtor prior to sale.—Where a decree on a mortgage was obtained against the father of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law, the debt having been incurred for joint family purposes, and in execution thereof the joint family property was attached, but prior to sale the judgment-debtor died; in a suit subsequently brought by the other members of the joint family, praying for a partition of their shares, and for a declaration that such shares were not liable to be sold in execution of the mortgage-decree, Held that there could not be a partition as between a person already dead and his sons, and that the whole of the ancestral property was liable for the mortgage-debt, the only declaration to which the plaintiffs could be entitled being that they were not liable to pay the debt. GORTERDHUN LALL v. *—A Hindu governed by the Mitakshara law mortgaged certain property to the plaintiffs. In a suit to recover the money due under the mortgage, and for a sale of the property brought against the mortgagor, his four sons, and the purchaser of the mortgagor's right and interest at an execution-sale, the lower Court gave the plaintiffs a decree against the mortgagor alone, holding that no necessity for the loan had been proved, but did not decide whether the property was the self-acquired property of the mortgagor or ancestral property. The High Court remanded the case for the trial of an issue upon this point. The lower Court found that the property was ancestral, and affirmed the original decree. Held that, assuming the property in dispute was ancestral, and that the mortgage was not valid against the sons, the plaintiffs were still entitled to recover the debt by the sale of the property of the father and the sons, because, supposing that the debt was contracted for personal purposes of the father, still the ancestral property in the hands of the sons was liable for the debt, it being not proved to have been contracted for immoral purposes. Lachman Dass v. of joint family property—Suit by son to recover possession of share—Limitation—Parties—Right of purchaser at execution-sale.—A suit by a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara law, to recover possession of property sold during his minority by his father, is within time if brought within three years after he attains the age of twenty-one. A father governed by the Mitakshara law may alienate the family property to discharge debts incurred by him for purposes not illegal or immoral. If the son seeks to set aside such alienation as to his own interest, he will have to show that the purposes of the alienation were illegal or immoral. If the son, being adult, has joined in the conveyance or led the alienee by his conduct to suppose that he assented to the alienation, he will be estopped from disputing its validity. These propositions apply to a mortgage, so as to place the purchaser at an execution-sale under a decree upon a mortgage-bond in the position of an alienee by private sale. If the son has been a party to the suit in which the decree upon the mortgage-bond was obtained, he is concluded; but if he has not been a party to the suit, he is not concluded, but must show that the original debt was contracted for illegal or immoral purposes, in order to recover his share of the property from the purchaser. Where the father has neither aliened nor mortgaged the family property, but it is sought by suit to make that property liable to satisfy a debt incurred by the father, the son as well as the father must be a party to the suit. When the creditor sues the father alone for a debt contracted by him alone, and in execution sells the right, title, and interest of the father only, the purchaser at this sale does not take the son's interest. RAMPHUL SINGH v. 81. ————— Joint family—

Sale in execution of money-decree against father of Mitakshara family.—The mere fact of a decree being passed against the father only of a joint family governed by the Mitakshara law will not lead necessarily to the conclusion that what was sold in execution of that decree is only the father's interest in the joint family property. Notwithstanding the decree being against the father only under certain circumstances, there may be a valid sale of a joint property belonging to the family in execution thereof. In execution of two money-decrees against A alone, the right, title, and interest of A in certain joint family property was sold, and the entire share of the joint family was taken possession of by the auction-purchaser. In a suit by the minor son and the wife of A, who with A constituted a joint family governed by the Mitakshara law, to recover possession of their shares in the property sold, Held that, although the plaintiffs were not parties to the decrees in execution of which the sales took place, the mere fact of A being sued alone was not sufficient to justify the finding that only his right, title, and interest passed under the sales; and that, as the facts of the case showed that the decrees were passed with reference to transactions which clearly concerned the joint family, the whole of the share of the joint family in the properties sold passed to the auction-purchaser; the plaintiffs having failed to show that the debts, which were the foundation of the decrees in the execution of which the sales were held, were contracted for immoral purposes. Umbika Prasad Tewary & Ram Sahay Lall, I. lawful debts—Sale of the whole joint estate in execution of decree against one co-sharer.—A, a judgment-creditor, having obtained a decree against B, the father of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law, in a suit to which the sons of B were not parties, but in which it was proved that the debt had been incurred for lawful purposes, proceeded to execute his decree by attaching and selling the joint family property. Thereupon the sons came in and objected to their interest in the property being sold in execution of a decree in a suit to which they were not parties, and, on their objection being disallowed, filed a suit against A and B to have it declared that their interest in the property was not liable to be sold to satisfy the decree. Held that the debt in respect of which the decree had been passed having been contracted for lawful purposes, the judgment-creditor was entitled to execute his decree against the whole of the joint family property. Held also that the ruling in the case of Deendyal Lal v. Jugdeop Narain Singh, I. L. R., 8 Cal., 193, had no application to the facts of this case. RAMDUT SINGH v. MAHENDER PRASAD. I. L. R., 9 Cal., 452 [12 C. L. R., 47]

Sale by one of several co-sharers in a joint estate—How far alienation by father of joint family property is binding on sons—Antecedent debts.—Although no member of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara or Mithila law has authority, without the consent of his co-sharers, to sell or mortgage even his own share in order to raise money on his own account, and not for the benefit of the joint family, yet if a father does alienate even the whole joint property of himself and his sons, in order to pay off antecedent personal debts, the sons cannot avoid such alienation, unless they prove that the debts were immoral. But to make the alienation to this extent binding upon the sons who did not consent to it, it must be shown that it was made for the payment of antecedent debts, and not merely in consideration of a loan or of a payment made to the father on the occasion of his making the alienation. In the case of a voluntary sale, the purchase-money does not constitute an antecedent debt such as to render that sale binding on the sons, unless they prove the transaction to have been immoral. HANUMAN KAMAT v. 84. Right of father to alienate—Suit by sons to set aside alienation.—A Hindu governed by Mitakshara law devised an 8 annas 11½ gundas share of his ancestral estate to his son A, and the remainder to another son. A, subsequently becoming much involved, borrowed Rs45,000 on a usufructuary mortgage by two deeds in favour of C and D respectively, the transaction being one and the same and the money borrowed being to pay off antecedent debts. The mortgagees, having been ejected, brought a suit to recover possession with mesne profits and obtained a decree against A, in execution of which "the 8 annas 11½ gundas share of the judgment-debtor" was attached and sold and purchased by the defendant, who was put in possession of the entire property. The sons of A, who were minors living with him, through their mother and guardian brought a suit to have the sale set aside on the ground that under the sale to the defendant only the interest of their father passed. No objection had been made by the guardian of the plaintiffs to the defendant taking possession of the entire estate. Held that the sons were not entitled to ask that the sale should be set aside. Where property acquired by a grandfather governed by the Mitakshara law is distributed among his sons, it does not become the self-acquired property of the sons so as to enable them to dispose of it without the consent of the grandsons. Mudden Gopal Thakoor v. Ram Bakesh Pandey, 6 W. R., 71, followed. HARDAI NARAIN v. HARUCK DEARI SINGH. 12 C. L. R., 104

85. Mitakshara—Suit by sons to set aside alienation by father—Necessity—Debt due by father—Purchase-money treated as debt due by father—Refund of whole of purchase-money when necessary before sons are entitled to have sale by father set aside—Objection that whole of ancestral property is not subject-matter of suit for partition is not a technical one.—Under the Mitakshara law, the son is bound to pay out of the ancestral property in his hands the debts contracted by his father, unless he can show that the debts were contracted for an immoral purpose. When therefore A and B, sons of C, a family governed by the Mitakshara law, sued C and D, who had purchased some of the joint family property from C during the minority of A and B, for a sum of Rs10,000, to recover possession of their shares in such property upon partition, and when in such suit A and B failed to prove that the purchase-money, Rs10,000, had been obtained by C for immoral purposes, Held that they were not entitled to succeed without refunding the whole of the sum of Rs10,000 to D, inasmuch as, if the sale was set aside, D would be entitled to recover the purchase-money from C, and it would thus become a debt due by C, the father, for which, under the circumstances, the whole of the joint family property, including the property sold, would be liable in the hands of A and B, the sons. In such a suit, if it be treated as one for partition, the objection that the whole of the joint family property is not included in it is by no means a technical one, inasmuch as it is open to the Court to hold that the property sold should fall entirely within the father's share, and to allot it to the purchaser accordingly. HANMAT RAI v. SURDAN DAS. I. L. R., 11 Cal., 398

86. Ancestral estate—Son's interest in Mitakshara law.—Under the Mitakshara and Mayukha, the son takes a vested interest in ancestral estate at his birth. But that interest is subject to the liability of that estate for the debts of his father and grandfather. The ancestral property of a Hindu father may be sold either by himself or by a Civil Court having jurisdiction in satisfaction of his debts not contracted for illegal or immoral purposes, and such sale will bind sons in esse at the time of the sale. Girdhar Lal v.

87. ——— Sale of ancestral property by father for debts incurred for immoral purposes—Son's interest in ancestral estate.—The plaintiffs (two of whom were minors) sued to set aside the sale and recover possession of certain ancestral lands on the ground that they had been sold by their father to pay off debts contracted for immoral purposes. The documentary evidence in the case showed that the lands had been originally mortgaged by the grandfather and father of the plaintiffs to the father of the defendant for Rs. 1,600; that they had subsequently taken from him other loans which, together with the mortgage-debt, amounted to Rs. 4,400-15-0; that on the 23rd May 1858 an agreement (exhibit No. 38) was made between the plaintiffs' father and the father of the defendant by which the former was to sell the equity of redemption in the mortgaged property to the latter in consideration of the latter realizing the former from the said debt of Rs. 4,400-15-0 and paying him the sum of Rs. 235; that accordingly on the 25th May 1858 the plaintiff's father conveyed the property to the defendant's father for Rs. 235 by a deed of sale (exhibit 17), which, however, did not refer either to the agreement (exhibit 38) or to the debts for Rs. 4,400-15-0. There was no allegation or evidence in the case showing that the plaintiffs' grandfather had contracted the debt of Rs. 4,400-15-0 for any immoral purposes, nor that their father applied the sum of Rs. 235 to the payment of debts incurred for immoral purposes, although it was in evidence that he drank to excess. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit, holding, inter alia, that the plaintiffs had failed to prove the property to have been sold by their father for debts incurred for excessive drinking. One of the issues raised by the Assistant Judge in appeal was whether there was any necessity for the sale of the property by the plaintiffs' father. He found this issue in the negative, and held the sale invalid, except as to the plaintiffs' father's own share. On special appeal to the High Court,—Held that, on the above facts, the plaintiffs had failed to establish any case entitling them to set aside the sale of the lands by their father. Held also that it ought to have been ascertained whether the minor plaintiffs were born before the date of the sale,—viz., 25th May 1858,—because if they had not been born before that date, their suit would have been unsustainable, as they never could have had any interest in the property. Quere—Even supposing that the plaintiffs' father had applied the sum of Rs. 235 to the payment of debts incurred for the immoral purpose of excessive drinking, whether the trivial amount would have justified the setting aside of the sale of the 25th May 1858, the main consideration for which was the release of the pre-existing debts for Rs. 4,400-15-0. *KASTUR BHAYANI v. 88. ——— Alienation of ancestral property by father—Son's interest in ancestral estate—Debt incurred for immoral or illegal purposes.—Subject to certain limited exceptions (as, for instance, debts contracted for immoral or illegal purposes), the whole of the estate of a Hindu undivided family is, in the hands of sons or grandsons, liable to the debts of the father or grandfather. In 1865 certain lands, the ancestral property of D, were sold under a decree passed against D, and were bought by J. These lands had been mortgaged in 1863 by D to N, in which transaction D had been principal and J his surety. In 1866, N sued on his mortgage, and on the 21st January 1868 a decree was made, directing the sale of the lands. Under that decree, the right, title, and interest of J were sold on the 1st April 1869 to C, and C afterwards sold the lands to M. In the present suit the plaintiffs (D's sons) sued D and M for possession of their two-thirds share, alleging that the land was ancestral, and that the whole of it had been illegally sold under the decree of the 21st January 1868. Both the lower Courts held that the land was ancestral; that the plaintiffs were united in interest with their father D when the mortgage-debt was contracted by the latter; that the burden lay upon them (plaintiffs) to prove that the debt had been incurred for immoral or illegal purposes, and they failed to discharge it; that they were therefore bound by the sale. The lower Courts accordingly dismissed the plaintiffs' claim. On second appeal, the High Court affirmed the decrees of the Courts below on the grounds mentioned above. SADASHIV JOSHI v. DINKAR JOSHI . I. L. R., 6 Bom., 520

89. ——— Father's authority to bind the interests of his sons in an ancestral property—Mortgage by father of ancestral property—Rights of a purchaser at Court sale of an undivided share of a co-parcener—Decree against father upon a mortgage of family property—Effect of decree ordering sale of mortgaged property—Purchaser at Court sale when bound to go behind decrees and enquire as to whether the debt was properly incurred.—D, the father of the defendants, by a mortgage dated October 1869, mortgaged a house together with other property to B, the father of the plaintiff. B sued D upon the mortgage and obtained a decree directing the sale of the mortgaged property. The execution sale took place in July 1877, and the plaintiff (the mortgagee's son) became the purchaser of the house. On attempting to take possession, he was resisted by the defendants (sons of the mortgagor), who alleged the house to be ancestral property, and denied the plaintiff's right to more than the third share to which the father had been entitled. Held by the High Court on appeal, upon the authority of Gridhareelall v. Kantoo Lall, 14 B. L. R., 187, as explained in Suraj Bansi Koor v. Sheo Prasad, I. L. R., 5 Cal., 148, that the shares of the defendants were validly bound by their father's mortgage, as it had been found by the lower Court that the debt, in respect of which the mortgage had been executed, had not been contracted by their father for improper or immoral purposes; but that, as the purchaser at the execution-sale (the plaintiff) was the mortgagee's son, the question arose whether he could be held to be a stranger to his father's suit on the mortgage, and as such not bound to go behind the decree and make enquiry as to whether the debt had been improperly incurred. This would depend on the circumstances under which he and his father were living and the relation existing between them. The case was accordingly remanded for a determination of the question whether the plaintiff was a stranger to his father's suit. Held that the defendants, not being joint with their father at the date of the suit, were not represented by him, and would be entitled to redeem, but only on condition, if the plaintiff insisted on it, of their redeeming the whole of the house. Unless the mortgage-deed expressly provided for the redemption of the son's interests on payment of a proportionate part of the debt, the mortgage should be treated as one and entire; the father's authority, according to Gridhareelal's case, being to apply or charge the whole property to or with the payment of his debts not improperly incurred. Where a decree passed in a suit upon a mortgage directs the mortgaged property to be sold, the decision in Deendyal's case, I. L. R., 3 Cal., 198, which limited the right, title, and interest which passed under the auction sale to the father's share, does not apply. TRIMBAK HALKRISHNA v. NARAYAN DAMODAR

The lender of these moneys sued the father to recover them by the sale of the family estate, and obtained a decree against him directing its sale, and sought to bring the family estate to sale in the execution of this decree. Held, in a suit by one of the sons to protect his share in such estate from sale in the execution of such decree, that such decree could not be regarded as against the father only, and his share in such property was not alone saleable in execution of it, but such suit and decree must be regarded as against the father as representing the joint family, and the whole of the family estate was saleable in execution of such decree. *Bissessar Lal Sahoo v. of these moneys sued the father to recover them by the sale of the family estate, and obtained a decree against him directing its sale. The right, title, and interest of the father only in the family estate was sold in the execution of this decree. The auction-purchasers having taken possession of the family estate, the sons and grandsons joined in a suit against them to recover their shares of the estate. Held that the sons and grandsons were entitled to recover their shares of the estate, inasmuch as the auction-purchasers had only acquired by their auction-purchase the rights and interests of the father in the estate, and that for the same reason it was unnecessary to enquire into the nature of the debt on account of which the father's rights and interests in the estate were sold. *Deendyal Lal v. Joint Hindu faamily property—Alienation by father—Son's rights.—G, a member of a joint undivided Hindu family consisting of himself and his sons, having wrongfully converted to his own use the property of another person, such person sued him for damages for such conversion and obtained a decree, in the execution of which G's rights and interests in the family property were put up for sale and purchased by C, who, in execution of such decree, took possession of such property. G's sons thereupon sued C to recover their shares, according to Hindu law, of such property. Held per OLDFIELD, J., that, although the father's debt was not one which the sons were in duty bound to pay, it might be that, had the family estate passed out of the family under the execution sale, the sons could not have recovered it from C, who was an auction-purchaser and a stranger to the suit against the father. Inasmuch as, however, the claim in that suit was not for a joint family debt, but a personal claim against the father, who was alone represented in that suit, and the decree in that suit was against him personally, and it was only his rights and interests that were put up for sale and purchased by C, the sons were entitled to recover from C their shares of the family property. Saraf Bansi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh, *I. L. repayment of moneys borrowed for the use and benefit of the family. The lender of these moneys sued the father to recover them by the sale of the estate, and obtained a decree against him directing its sale, and sought to bring the estate to sale in the execution of such decree. Held, in a suit by the minor son to protect his share in the estate from sale in the execution of such decree, that the suit in which such decree was made, and such decree, being regarded as a suit against the father, and as a decree made against him as representing the family, such decree might be executed against the estate, notwithstanding the minor son had not formally been joined as a defendant in such suit. *Bhassur Lal Sahas v. The obligee of such bond sued B thereon and obtained a decree, which directed the sale of such share, and such share was put up for sale and was purchased by C. R subsequently sued B and his mother for partition of the family property, including such share, claiming a one-third share of such property. C was made a defendant in the suit, and so was P, R's grandmother, who claimed to share equally with the other members of the family in such property. Held that it must be presumed that B was sued on such bond, and that the decree in such suit was made against him as the head of the family, and R could not recover from C the share of mouzah B. *RADHA KISHEN MAN v. 85. — Adult son—Mortgage of family property by father—Decree against father—Right of son.—The father in a joint undivided Hindu family governed by the law of the Mitakshara mortgaged the ancestral property of the family as security for a debt incurred by him. His son was of age at the time of the mortgage, but the mortgagee did not make the son join in the mortgage. When the mortgagee brought a suit to enforce the mortgage, he brought it against the father alone; and he obtained a decree against the father alone for the sale of the property. On the property being attached in execution of the decree, the son objected to the sale of the property, so far as his own share according to Hindu law was concerned. This objection having been disallowed, he sued the mortgagee for a declaration that such share was not liable to be sold in execution of the decree, claiming on the ground that he was not bound by the mortgage or the decree, not having joined in the mortgage or been a party to the suit in which the decree was made, and that the debt secured by the mortgage had been incurred by his father for immoral purposes. Held that the son was not entitled to succeed in such suit merely because, although he was of age, he was not required by the mortgagee to join in the mortgage, and was not made a party to the suit to enforce the mortgage; but that he was in the same position as he would have been had he been a minor at the time the mortgage was made and the decree was passed, and was therefore only entitled to succeed if he showed that the debt incurred by his father was incurred for immoral purposes of his own. Held further that, inasmuch as the debt in question was incurred for necessary purposes, and as the son was aware of the mortgage and did not protest against it, but on the contrary stood by and benefited thereby, and as he was aware of the suit and did not apply to be made a party thereto, he was asking too late for the relief which he sought. *Ram Narain Lal v. 86. — Alienation of ancestral property by father—Suit by son to recover his interest—Burden of proof.—Where a Hindu, a minor, governed by the law of the Mitakshara, sued to set aside an alienation of ancestral property by his father, on the ground that such alienation was made to satisfy a debt contracted for immoral purposes, Held by STRAIGHT, J., that the burden of proving that the debt was contracted for such purposes, and that the defendant had notice that it was contracted for such purposes, lay on the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff was not discharged from such burden because he had proved generally that his father had been guilty of extravagant waste of the ancestral property. Hanooman Pershad Pandey v. Babooes Munraj Koonverree, 6 Moore's I. A., 392; and Suraj Bansi Koor v. Shoo Persad Singh, I. L. R., 5 Cal., 148, referred to. Held also by STRAIGHT, J., that it could not be presumed from such conduct of the father that the debt in question had been contracted for immoral purposes. Per STUART, C.J., that the plaintiff's father having been guilty of extravagant waste of the ancestral property, the burden of proof in this case lay on the defendant. As, however, there was reason to suspect that the suit was a collusive one, brought at the instance of the plaintiff's father, if not really by him, and it was very doubtful whether the alienation was objectionable on the ground taken in the name of the plaintiff, it would not be safe to give the plaintiff a decree. *HANU-MAN SINGH v. 87. — Mitakshara and Mithila law—Execution of decree—Sale of ancestral estate in satisfaction of father's debt—Parties to proceedings.—There is no conflict of authority as to the principle that sons cannot set up their rights, which are to take present vested interests, on their birth, jointly with their father in ancestral estate, against their father's alienation for an antecedent debt, or against his creditors' remedies for his debt, if such debt has not been contracted for an immoral purpose; the law on this point being the same under the Mitakshara and the Mithila shasters. From the above must be distinguished the question how far the joint sons can be precluded from disputing the liability attaching to their shares, where proceedings have been taken by or against the father alone. If the father's debt, not having been contracted for an immoral purpose, is such as to support a sale of the entirety of the joint estate, either he may sell the latter without suit, or the creditor may obtain a sale of it by suit. But the joint sons, not being parties to the execution-proceedings or to the sale, are not precluded from having a question as to the nature of the debt tried in a suit of their own; a right which will, however, avail them nothing unless it can be shown that the debt was not such as to justify a sale of the joint estate. If, upon the proceedings and in regard to the intention of the parties, doubts are raised whether what has been sold is the interest of the father alone or the joint estate, the absence of the sons from the proceedings may be a material consideration. But if the purchaser has bargained and paid for the entirety, he may defend his title upon any ground which would have justified a sale, had the sons been brought in to defend their interests in the execution-proceedings. Deendyal Lall v. Jugdeep Narain Singh, L. R., 4 I. A., 247; I. L. R., 8 Cal., 198, does not lay down as an invariable rule that co-parcenary interests will not pass by an execution sale unless the co-parceners are joined in the suit, or that only the father's interest passes to the purchaser where the suit was against the father alone. This debt being one which must be taken as a joint family debt, though the suit upon it was against the father alone.—Held that a claim by minor sons for exemption of their shares failed on the merits, the entire family estate having passed by the sale. *NANOMI BABUASIN v. It is otherwise if the decree in execution of which the sale takes place is a mere money-decree. Per KERNAN, J.—It will still be necessary in all cases where a creditor seeks in a suit to bind a son's estate in ancestral or other property for a debt incurred by his father and not by him, that the son should be made party to the suit. *Girdhars Lall v. —A sale of ancestral property in execution of a money-decree obtained against a Hindu father will, if the debt was neither immoral nor illegal, pass to the purchaser the entire interest of which the father could dispose,—i. e., his son's as well as his own share,—provided the purchaser has bargained and paid for such interest. 100. ————— Power of the father to alienate ancestral property for pious purposes.

—According to the Hindu law, the power of the father to make alienations of joint ancestral estate without his son's consent extends to provision of a permanent shrine for a family idol. Gopal Chand Panda v. Babu Kanwar Singh, S. D. A., 1843, p. 24, referred to. In a suit brought by a son to set aside an alienation of ancestral estate by the father for the purpose above mentioned, the son having contended that the real motive for the gift was not piety to the gods, but malice against him, the Court remitted an issue to the lower Appellate Court for the purpose of ascertaining whether the endowment had been made bona fide for the satisfaction of the idol and the benefit of the donor's soul, or from motives of spite against the plaintiff. *RAGHUNATH PRASAD v. 101. ————— Joint Hindu family—Liability of ancestral estate for satisfaction of father's debt, when not incurred for immoral purposes.

—A suit was brought against G, the head of a joint Hindu family, by S, to whom he had mortgaged ten biswas of ancestral estate as security for a loan, to recover the amount of the loan by enforcement of the mortgage against the entire ten biswas. During the pendency of the suit, G died, and his son Z and his widow B were brought on the record as his legal representatives. In support of his claim to enforce the mortgage against the entire ten biswas, and not merely against the share therein which G, during his lifetime, might have got separated, the plaintiff pleaded that the debt incurred by G was of such a character that, according to the Hindu law, his son Z was under a pious duty to discharge it out of his own estate. It was found that, although the father was grossly extravagant and selfish in his expenditure, there was no evidence that the proceeds of the particular loan in question were applied to any special licentious purposes, but that the money was not borrowed to meet any family necessity or laid out in necessary expenses, but used in G's personal expenses. Held that this evidence did not justify the lower Court in decreeing that the debt should be charged on the share of the father alone in the ten biwas mortgaged, as it did not establish that he had wasted the money on immoral purposes, or that the debt was such that a pious son would be free to repudiate it. *Nanomi Babunsi v. Suit by sons to set aside alienation—Burden of proof.—The rule enunciated by the Privy Council in Muddun Thakoor v. Kantoo Lal, 14 B. L. R., 187, and *Duraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Pershad Singh, I. L. The authorities seem to come to this, that in those cases where a person buys ancestral estate, or takes a mortgage of it from the father, whom he knows to have only a limited interest in it, for a sum of ready money paid down at the time of the transaction, such person, in a suit by the sons to avoid it, must establish that he made all reasonable and fair inquiry before effecting the sale or mortgage, and that he was satisfied by such inquiry, and believed, in paying his money, that it was required for the legal necessities of the joint family, in respect of which the father, as head and managing member, could deal with and bind the joint ancestral estate. *LAL SINGH v. Creditor's remedy against sons how affected by reason of his having sued the father separately.—Although a decree may have been obtained against the father of a joint Hindu family for a debt incurred by him, a subsequent suit is maintainable against the son in respect of the same debt for the enforcement of the son's liability for it, such debt being one which the son is legally bound to pay. The creditor may in his original suit implead the son, but his omitting to do so will not deprive him of his subsequent remedy against the son. There is no difference in principle as regards the subsequent remedy of the creditor against the son between the case of a debt secured by a mortgage and a simple money debt. *Lachmi Narain v. Joint family property sold in execution of a decree on a mortgage against the father alone—Decree satisfied—Subsequent recovery by the sons of part of the mortgaged property—Remedy of mortgagees.—A mortgagee held a mortgage of joint family property given by the father alone. He sued on his mortgage without making the sons parties to the suit, and, having obtained a decree, brought the whole of the joint family property to sale and purchased it himself. This purchase, together with a further cash payment of Rs. 50, satisfied the mortgage-debt. After the mortgage had been thus satisfied, the sons brought a suit for recovery of their shares in the joint family property amounting to one-fourth, and obtained a decree, and got possession of the property claimed. The mortgagee then brought a suit against the sons to recover from them a share of the mortgage-debt proportionate to the share in the joint family property owned by them. Held that, the original mortgage having become extinct, the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for one-fourth of the price realized by the mortgaged property at auction-sale and to recover the same by sale of the interest of the sons in the joint family property. *Bhawani Prasad v. Joint family—Decree against the father alone—Attachment of family property in execution of such decree—Son's interest in the family property when bound by decrees against the father or by sale effected by the father.—Where in a joint Hindu family the father disposes of family property, the son's interest is bound, unless the son can show, in proceedings taken for that purpose, that the disposal of the property by his father was made under circumstances which deprived his father of his disposing power. So also, where family property is sold under proceedings taken against the father alone, the son's interest is bound, unless the son can show that the sale was on account of an obligation to which he was not subject. The father is, in fact, the representative of the family both in transactions and in suits, subject only to the right of the sons to prevent an entire dissipation of the estate by particular instances of wrong-doing on the father's part. *JAGABHAI LALUBAI v. 108. ———— Joint family—Mortgage by father—Decree subsequently to father's death against eldest son as heir of father—Minor sons not parties—Sale in execution of family property other than that comprised in mortgage—Subsequent suit by minor sons to recover their shares—Minor sons when bound by decree against eldest son as heir of father.—One K mortgaged certain land to B and died, leaving four sons, viz., A and the three minor plaintiffs. Subsequently B brought a suit on the mortgage against K by his heir R for the amount due, and obtained a decree, whereby it was ordered that the amount should be recovered from the mortgaged property and, if that proved insufficient, from the other estate of the deceased. The minor sons were not made parties to that suit, nor was R sued as representing the joint family. In execution of the decree, B attached and sold the whole of the joint family property, the certificate of sale showing that the right, title, and interest of K, deceased, by his heir R, was attached and sold and conveyed to the purchaser. The three minor sons subsequently brought this suit to recover some of the property, contending that their shares were not bound by the sale. Held, on the authority of Dissauur Lall Sahoo v. Luckmassur Singh, L. R., 6 I. A., 288, and reversing the decree of the lower Court, that the property in question having been declared liable for the debt incurred by the father, the intention was that the estate in its entirety should be sold. The minor sons were therefore bound by the sale, unless they could prove that the father's debt had been incurred for an immoral and improper purpose. The case was accordingly sent back for trial of an issue upon that point, with a direction that the burden of proof should lie upon the plaintiffs.

107. ———— Mortgage of family property by father—Decree against father enforcing mortgage—Decree for money against father—Sale in execution of decrees—Rights of sons.—The members of a joint Hindu family brought suits in which they respectively prayed for decrees that their respective proprietary rights in certain ancestral property might be declared, and that their interests in such property, which were about to be sold in execution of two decrees against their father, might be exempted from such sale. One of these decrees was for enforcement of a hypothecation by the plaintiff's father of the property in suit. It was admitted on behalf of the plaintiffs in connection with this decree that, although the judgment-debtor was a person of immoral character, the creditor had no means of knowing that the moneys advanced by him were likely to be applied to any other purpose than that for which they were professedly borrowed, namely, for the purpose of an indigo factory in which the family had an interest. Held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to any declaration in respect of the execution proceedings under the decree for enforcement of hypothecation. The second of the decrees above referred to was a simple money-decree for the principal and interest due upon a hundi executed by the father in favour of the decree-holder. The suit terminating in the decree was brought against the father alone, and the debt was treated as his separate debt. Held that the creditor's remedy was to have brought his suit, if he desired to obtain a decree which he could execute against the family property and not against the father's interest only, and if he could maintain such a suit, either against those members of the family against whom he desired to execute his decree or against the father as head of the family, expressly or impliedly suing him in that capacity; but that, not having taken this course, his decree was not enforceable against the plaintiff's rights and interests in the attached property. Muttayan Chetti v. Saugili Virapandian Chinnaambiar, I. L. R., 8 Mad., 1, distinguished. Nanomi Babuasia v. Modasa Mohan, I. L. R., 13 Cal., 21, and Basa Mal v. Maharaj Singh, I. L. 106. ———— Son's liability for father's debts in lifetime of father—Suit against father and sons—Right in suit to decree against sons.—A creditor of a Hindu brought a suit against him and his sons whom it was sought to make liable on the ground that the debts were incurred for the benefit of the family, but he did not obtain a decree against the sons. Held that the plaintiff could have prosecuted his claim against the sons in that suit, and have obtained a decree making their shares in the family property liable for the father's debt. RAMARAMI NADAN v. ULAKANATHA GOUNDAN I. L. R., 23 Mad., 40

105. ———— Decree against father for money due, the sons not being joined as defendants—Death of father after original debt barred by limitation, the decree subsisting—Suit against the sons on the decree—Period of limitation how calculated—One cause of action.—Certain creditors, having in 1882 obtained a decree, kept alive that decree until 1893, when the judgment-debtor died. They then sought to make liable the property of the deceased in the hands of the defendants, his sons and representatives, stating the cause of action against the said defendants as having arisen in 1893, the date of their father's death. The sons pleaded limitation, and the question was whether the period of limitation against the sons began to run from the date of death of their father or from the date at which the debt originally became due. On a reference being made to a Full Bench as to "whether a creditor in the position of the plaintiff has a further right to sue the son for his father's debt on the death of the father, apart from the right to sue him in the father's lifetime for such debt,"—Held that in such a case there are not two causes of action, and such a creditor has not a further right to sue the son for his father's debt on the death of the father, apart from the right to sue him in the father's lifetime for such debt, and that, in consequence, the suit was barred by limitation. *Arunachala v. 110. ——— Joint Hindu family—Mortgage by father—Suit to enforce the mortgage against sons' shares—Legal necessity—Burden of proof.—As a general rule, a creditor endeavouring to enforce his claim under a hypothecation-bond given by a Hindu father against the estate of a joint Hindu family in respect of money lent or advanced to the father having only a limited interest should, if the question is raised, prove either that the money was obtained by the father for a legal necessity or that he made such reasonable inquiries as would satisfy a prudent man that the loan was contracted to pay off an antecedent debt, or for the other legal necessities of the family. There is a distinction between such cases as this and cases in which a decree has been obtained against the father and the property sold, or cases in which the sons come into Court to ask for relief against a sale effected by their father for an antecedent debt. Where a decree is obtained against the father and a sale effected, the presumption is that the decree was properly made. Where a son comes into Court to ask for relief against a sale effected by his father for an antecedent debt, it is for the son to make out a case for the relief asked for. In a suit against the members of a joint Hindu family upon a bond given by their father, and in which family property was hypothecated, no evidence was given on either side as to the circumstances in which the bond was given. There was no evidence to show that any inquiry had been made by the plaintiff as to the objects for which the bond was executed by the father. Held that the burden of proof was upon the plaintiff to show either that the money was obtained for a legal necessity or that he had made reasonable inquiries and obtained such information as would satisfy a prudent man that the loan was contracted to pay off an antecedent debt or for the other legal necessities of the family, and that, no evidence having been given, the suit must be dismissed. JAYNA v. 111. ——— Sale of joint family estate in execution of decree upon the father's debt—Exoneration of son's share only where debt has been incurred for an immoral or illegal purpose—Burden of proving the nature of the debt.—The sons in a joint family under the Mitakshara cannot set up their rights of inheritance in the family estate against their father's alienation for an antecedent debt or against a sale in execution of a decree upon such debt, although the sons may not have been parties to the decree, unless the sons can establish that the debt has been contracted for an immoral or illegal purpose. The son's position is distinct in this respect from that of other relations in the joint family, inasmuch as it is his duty to pay, out of the family estate, his father's debt. A decree against indebted fathers, in a family consisting of fathers and sons, charged the family estate, and the sale in execution was not merely of the right, title, and interest of the debtors, but of the property being such interest. On the other hand, before the sale, notice was given on behalf of the sons that the property was ancestral and joint. Held, in a suit on behalf of the sons against the purchaser at the sale to recover their shares, that it was for the plaintiffs to show affirmatively that the debts were contracted for an illegal or immoral purpose, and that to establish general extravagance against the fathers was insufficient. It was not necessary for the purchaser to show that there had been a proper inquiry as to the purpose of the loan or to prove that the money was borrowed for family necessities. BHAGBUT PRESHAD v.  [I. R., 15 I. A., 97]

112. ——— Joint family—Mortgage by a father—Decree against father on mortgage giving possession with interest and costs—Son's liability to satisfy the decree as to interest and costs.—The plaintiff's father mortgaged certain ancestral property for a limited term. A suit was brought on the mortgage against the father, and a decree was passed, directing the mortgaged property to be handed over to the mortgagee for a certain time, and awarding payment of interest and costs by the father. In execution of this decree, the mortgagee sought to recover the costs by sale of the property in question. Thereupon the plaintiffs sued for a declaration that the property was not liable to be sold in execution of the decree against the father, on the ground that the debts contracted by the father were for immoral purposes, and that therefore the estate could not be bound by the decree at all. The Court of first instance found that the debts had not been incurred for any immoral purpose, and dismissed the suit. On appeal to the High Court, Held that under the decree passed against the father the interest and costs became a debt upon the whole estate, from which it could not escape, unless it was clearly made out that the debt was the result of fraud or immorality. Although the father alone was primarily liable for the fulfilment of the decree, still the debt was one which was rightly chargeable to the whole estate, and the sons would be liable, just as they would have been liable if the father had compromised the suit, unless the transaction were tainted with fraud or immorality. In a united family the father is capable of acting as the representative of the family, except in the case of borrowing for fraudulent or immoral purposes. In this case he entered into litigation, which resulted in loss to himself and the family which he represented, and he could make the family responsible for any loss so incurred. The judgment-creditor could also make them liable, although where the father desires to represent the whole estate he can do so, yet he is not necessarily bound to do so, nor is the whole estate liable where he explicitly or impliedly binds only his own portion. NARAYANRAV DAMODAR v. 113. Ancestral property—Joint family—Alienations by father—Purchaser—Notice.—Where a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara law seeks to set aside his father's alienations of ancestral property, if the alienees are purchasers at Court-sales held in execution of decrees against the father, it is not enough for him to show that the debts for which the decrees were passed were contracted by the father for immoral purposes; it must also be shown that the auction-purchasers had notice that the debts were so contracted. The points to be determined in such cases are:—(1) What was the interest that was bargained for and paid for by the purchaser? Was it the father's interest only, or was it the interest of the entire family? (2) Were the debts, for which the decrees were obtained, under which the property was sold, contracted for immoral purposes? and (3) Had the purchaser notice that the debts were so contracted? Suraj Bansi Koor v. Shao Proshad Singh, L. R., 6 I. A., 98; I. L. R., 5 Cal., 148, and Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun, L. R., 13 I. A., 1; I. L. R., 13 Cal., 21, followed. The plaintiff sued in 1883 for partition of ancestral property, consisting (inter alia) of certain thikans which had been sold in execution of decrees passed against his father. The plaintiff, though an adult at the time, was not a party to the suits in which the decrees were passed against the father, nor to the execution-proceedings. In the certificates of sale granted to the different purchasers, the property sold was described as being a four-anna share which would be equal to the shares of the father and the son together, but this description was qualified by the statement that "the right, title, and interest in the above-mentioned property of the said R (i.e., the father) was sold." There was nothing to show that the purchasers bargained for and paid for the entire family estate. Moreover, the plaintiff's possession and enjoyment of the thikans in question was never disturbed, though the sharers had each a separate possession of distinct portions of the ancestral property. Held that, under the circumstances, the father's interest alone passed to the auction-purchasers. KRISHNAJI LAKSHMAN v. VITHAL RAVJI BHOWA . . . I. L. R., 12 Bom., 625

114. Joint family—Money-decree—Decree against father alone—Purchaser at execution-sale under such decree—How far such sale binding on the interest of the sons not parties to the suits or execution-proceedings.—In the case of a joint Hindu family, whose family property is sold by the father alone by private conveyance, or where it is sold in execution of a decree obtained against him alone, the mode of determining whether the entire property or only his interest in it passes by the sale is to enquire what the parties contracted about in the case of a conveyance, or what the purchaser had reason to think he was buying if there was no conveyance, but only a sale in execution of a money-decree. In the case of an execution-sale, the mere fact that the decree was a mere money-decree against the father as distinguished from one passed in a suit for the realization of a mortgage-security directing the property to be sold, is not a complete test. The plaintiff claimed certain property from the defendant, alleging that he had purchased it from a third person, who had purchased it at an auction-sale held in execution of a money-decree obtained against the first defendant alone. The first defendant was the father of the remaining defendants, and they constituted a joint Hindu family. The sons contended that only the father's interest was bound by the sale, and the lower Courts decided in their favour. On appeal the High Court reversed the decree, and sent back the case for a fresh decision, on the ground that the lower Courts had decided the question in the case exclusively on the ground that the property had been purchased in execution of a money-decree without referring to the execution-proceedings. KAGAL GANPATA v. 115. *Ancestral zamindari sold in execution of decree for money against the father, including the son's right of succession—Debt not immoral.—A sale in execution of a decree against a zamindar, for his debt, purported to comprise the whole estate in his zamindari. In a suit brought by his son against the purchaser, making the father also a party defendant, to obtain a declaration that the sale did not operate as against the son as heir, not affecting his interest in the estate, the evidence did not establish that the father's debt had been incurred by him for any immoral or illegal purpose. Held that, the impeachment of the debt failing, the suit failed; and that no partial interest but the whole estate had passed by the sale, the debt having been one which the son was bound to pay. Hardi Narain Sahu v. Ruder Perakash Misser, I. L. R., 10 Cal., 626 (where the sale was only of whatever right, title, and interest the father had in property), distinguished. MINAKSHI NATUDU v. 116. Money-decree against father—Attachment of ancestral estate.—In execution of a money-decree, ancestral property of the joint family of the judgment-debtor was attached. His sons sued to release their interest from attachment, alleging that the judgment-debt had been incurred for immoral purposes, which was denied by the decree-holder. It was held by the lower Courts that nothing more than the father's share was liable to be attached, as the sons were not parties to the decree. Held that the nature of the debt should be determined, since the creditor's power to attach and sell depends on the father's power to sell, which again depends on the nature of the debt. *Nanomi Babuasin v. Pensions Act, Certificate of Collector under.—The power of the father, as representative of the family, to bind the son's interests in the family estate, except in special cases, being judicially recognized, the onus of establishing the existence of those special circumstances necessarily lies on the sons for the purpose of defeating his creditor's remedies against the ancestral estate. The plaintiff sued to recover the balance of a debt due on a mortgage-bond alleged to have been executed in 1878 by the defendant's father (since deceased) to the plaintiff's father. The defendant (inter alia) pleaded that the loan was contracted without his knowledge and for immoral purposes, and that his share in the mortgaged property was not answerable for the debt. He also contended, as to a sum of Rs109-8-0 claimed by the plaintiff, that this sum was claimed in respect of saraujam, and was not recoverable by the plaintiff without a certificate under the Pensions Act. The lower Court found that the defendant's father had been a man of extravagant and vicious habits, but held that the defendant had failed to prove that the debt in question had been contracted for immoral purposes. The Judge therefore awarded the plaintiff's claim. On appeal by the defendant to the High Court, Held, confirming the decree of the lower Court, that the burden lay on the defendant of proving that the loan to the father secured by the mortgage-bond in the suit was for an illegal or immoral purpose, and that the defendant had not discharged this burden. The mere proof that his father had been a man of extravagant and immoral habits was not enough. Held also that, as no certificate from the Collector had been produced, as required by the Pensions Act, the claim to Rs109-8-0 should be disallowed. The sons had not been joined as defendants in that suit, though they were of age at the time; but they had known of it and had not objected to family funds being spent in its defence. On their suing for an injunction to restrain the decree-holder from executing the decree, on the ground that it was not binding on them, Held that the question how far the sons are bound by a decree against the father must be decided with reference to the particular facts of each case. If the father is manager and the question in issue is one which equally affects him and the other members of the family, and if the suit is properly defended, the adjudication will bind all the persons interested with the father, since in that case it will be presumed that the father represents their interests. The sons will still more clearly be bound if, being of full age, and knowing of the litigation, they acquiesce in the conduct of it by the father. KUNJAN CHETTI v. SIDDHA PILLAI I. L. The sons objected that such property was not liable to attachment, and the decree-holder was referred to a regular suit. He now brought a suit against the sons. Held (1) that the sons were not entitled to go behind the decree except for the purpose of showing that the judgment-debt was immoral or illegal in its origin; (2) that the judgment-debt was not of an illegal or immoral nature so as to exclude the pious obligation of the sons to discharge it. NATABATTAN v. S. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act lays down only a rule of procedure; and the words "all person" in the section could have hardly been intended to include a Mitakshara son—much less a minor son—in a suit where the father is sued in his representative capacity. *Suraj Bansi Koer v. the debt not being proved to have been incurred for immoral or illegal purposes, the mortgagees would be entitled to a money-decree against the defendants, not upon the mortgage-security, but upon the simple obligation created by the bond, and a suit for such a relief must, under the Limitation Act, be instituted within six years from the due date of the mortgage-bond. *Lachman Dass v. It being not necessary to keep the case pending, it is ordered that, attachment being allowed to stand, the case be struck off for the present." The judgment-debtor, the father of a joint Hindu family subject to the Mitakshara law, having died, a fresh application for execution was subsequently made against his estate. The heirs of the judgment-debtor objected to the application on the ground that, the decree having been passed against their father alone, it could not be executed against the joint family estate, now theirs by operation of Mitakshara law. Held that, inasmuch as there was an attachment subsisting at the time of the application, the estate of the judgment-debtor under attachment at the time of his death was liable after his death, even though it had passed to the surviving members

Before possession was obtained, a son was born to him. A decree for specific performance was passed and executed against him, the son not being brought on to the record. In a suit by the son for partition of the property in question, Held that the plaintiff had an existing right in the property which was not bound by the decree and the subsequent proceedings, and that he was entitled to the relief sought. Sembla—That a contract for sale of land made by a Hindu before a son is born to him is not binding on the son born before the transfer of the property takes place. *PONNAMBALA PILLAI v. In 1863, L, who was born in 1837, sued on his own account and as guardian of his minor brother R, who was born in 1856, to set aside the sale. The father died in 1857. Held L's cause of action accrued when possession was taken under the deed of sale, and not at the father's death. R's birth did not create a new right of action in L either alone or jointly with R. The suit, therefore, was barred by lapse of time. The sale was by auction to an innocent purchaser for value. Held that, in a suit brought within twelve years from the date on which the purchaser obtained possession, the sons and grandsons of A, deceased, were entitled to recover possession without making any refund of the purchase-money. NATHU LAL CHOWDREY v. 143. ———— Bond fide purchaser from vendee of father—Refund of purchase-money.—In a suit by some members of a joint family under Mitakshara law to set aside an alienation of some of the joint family property effected by their father, it appeared that ten years had elapsed since the alienation; and that about six years before the suit was brought, the purchaser from the father sold again to the principal defendants for valuable consideration, and there was no suggestion that these defendants did not purchase bond fide, the plaintiffs apparently acquiescing in the sale, and not interrupting during that time the enjoyment of the property by the father's vendee. The Court refused to set aside the alienation. The alienation would not have been set aside at any rate without a refund of the purchase-money to the defendants. SUBUD NARAIN CHOWDREY v. Dandabande Mullick*, 9 Moore's I. A., 123) that the purchase being made with moneys derived from the income of her husband's estate then lying in her hands, she was competent to alienate her right and interest in whole or in part to reconvey them into money and spend it if she chose. *Gross v. 151. ———— Alienation of property purchased with accumulations derived from husband's estate—Income—Accumulations.—Quære—Whether a Hindu widow has power to alienate, beyond her own life-interest, property which she has purchased from accumulations of income derived from her late husband's estate, made after his death, and while she was entitled to a Hindu widow's interest in such estate? HUSBUTTI KORRAI v. ISHBI DUT KORR

In the same case in the Privy Council it was held that a widow's savings from the income of her limited estate are not her stridhan; and if she has made no attempt to dispose of them in her lifetime, there is no dispute but that they follow the estate from which they arose. But it is not always possible to fix the line which separates accretions to the husband's estate from income held in suspense in the widow's hands, as to which she has not determined whether or not she will spend it. Where, however, both the family property and property purchased by the widow out of savings from her income were alienated by her, with the object of changing the succession, Held that accretion was clearly established, and that the after-purchases were inalienable by her for any purpose that would not justify alienation of the original estate. A daughter, obtaining a transfer from her deceased father's widows of their interests in his estate, does not acquire thereby an estate valid against the title of the father's collateral heirs expectant on the deaths of the widows. *ISHBI DUT KORR v. The authority upon this matter is found in Ishidut Koor v. Husbutti Korrai, I. L. R., 10 Cal., 324; I. R., 10 I. A., 150, where a widow having made no distinction between the original estate and the after-purchases, the latter were held inalienable by her for any

154. ———— Accumulations by Hindu widow—Accumulations—Period up to which they may be dealt with—Legacy to Hindu widow.—The right of a Hindu widow to the income and accumulations of her husband's estate arising subsequently to his death is absolute, and is not affected by the fact that she may receive them in a lump sum; but whether she receives them as they fall due or after they have accumulated in the hands of others, her right is the same. The question to be sought for in determining her right to deal with such income and accumulations of income is one of intention. If she has invested her savings in such a manner as to show an intention to augment her husband's estate, she cannot afterwards deal with such investments, except for reasons which would justify her dealing with the original estate; but if she has evinced no such intention, she can, at any time during her life, deal with the profits. Where she invests her income, making a distinction between the investments and the original estate, she can at any time thereafter deal with such investment, save in the case of the purchase of other property as a permanent investment. But should she invest her savings in property held by her without making any distinction between the original estate and the after-purchases, the prima facie presumption is that it has been her intention to keep the estate one and entire, and that the after-purchases are an increment to the original estate. GRISH CHUNDER ROY v. The money was not received by her as a capitalized part of the inheritance, but as income that had been accumulated during her tenure of her widow's estate. The widow did not act showing an intention on her part to make this sum of money, the greater part of which she invested in Government securities, part of the family inheritance for the benefit of the heirs. After the lapse of about twenty years, she disposed of it as her own. Held that the money so invested by the widow belonged to her as income derived from her widow's estate, and was subject to her disposition. SAODAMINI DAS v. ADMINISTRATOR-GENERAL OF BENGAL . . . from that of manager—Liabilities of alienees.—A widow stands in a different position from that of a manager of a joint family. The latter can act only with the consent, express or implied, of the body of co-parceners. In the widow's case, the co-parceners are reduced to herself, and the estate centres in her. She can therefore do what the body of co-parceners can do, subject always to the condition that she acts fairly to the expectant heirs. The rights of these heirs impose, on persons dealing with a widow, the obligation of special circumspection, failing which they may find their securities against the estate to be of no avail after the widow's death. CHIMNAJI GOVIND GODBOLE v. 165. — Alienation of husband's immoveable property—Power to make absolute alienation.—A purchaser of immoveable property from a Hindu widow, in order to show that the property is absolutely conveyed to him, ought to aver and prove that she sold it under such special circumstances as justify a Hindu widow in alienating the immoveable property of her husband without the consent of his heirs. Even if her husband were separate in estate from his father and brothers at the time of his death and died without male issue, his widow would have no power to make an absolute alienation of his estate in the absence of such special circumstances. She can only dispose of her (widow's) estate in his immoveable property, which estate determines either upon her death or re-marriage, and the purchaser is not entitled to retain the property after the occurrence of either of these events. The plaintiff sued to recover possession of certain immoveable property sold to him by the first defendant, a Hindu widow. The second defendant answered that his father and the first defendant's husband were undivided brothers, and that, as a childless widow, she had no right to sell the property. Both the lower Courts upheld the sale as absolute on the ground that she was competent to make it as widow of a separate Hindu. The High Court, on second appeal, held that the decrees of the lower Courts were unsustainable, as they did not contain the limitation pointed out above, and remanded the case for the trial of the issue, whether there were any such special circumstances as would justify the absolute sale by the first defendant to the plaintiff. *GURUNATH NIKRANTH v. died on the 12th May 1867, leaving him surviving a widow B and a brother R, who was admittedly the next reversioner. In July 1867, B purported to adopt a son D to A, and subsequently in September 1867 obtained a certificate under Act XL of 1868. In 1872 B obtained a loan from the plaintiff M of Rs. 9,000, and to secure its repayment executed a mortgage of seven mouzabs in favour of M as guardian of D. The money was advanced and mortgage executed at the instigation of B and with his consent, and upon his representation that D was the duly adopted son of A, and it was admitted that the money was specifically advanced for, as well as applied towards, the payment of decrees obtained against A in his lifetime and against his estate after his death. B died in 1878. On the 14th August 1880, M instituted a suit against D upon his mortgage, and in that suit he made S a party defendant as being the purchaser of the mortgagor's interest in one of the mouzabs included in his mortgage. On the 20th June 1882, M obtained a decree declaring that he was entitled to recover the amount due by sale of the mortgaged mouzabs. In the proceedings taken in execution of that decree M was opposed by L, who was afterwards held to be a benamidar for S, who claimed that he had, on the 8th November 1880, purchased five out of the seven mouzabs at a sale in execution of certain decrees against R. On the 29th February 1884 L's claim was allowed, and on the 11th August 1884 M brought this suit against L, S, R, and D, and the decree-holders in the suits against R, for a declaration of his right to follow the mortgaged property in the hands of S. It was found as a fact that the adoption of D was invalid; that the advance by M to B was justified by legal necessity; and that L was the benamidar of S. It also appeared that M had himself become the purchaser of one of the mortgaged mouzabs. The lower Court gave M a decree declaring him to be entitled to recover the full amount of the mortgage-money from the five mouzabs in the hands of S. L and S appealed, and M filed a cross-appeal, alleging the adoption to be valid and binding on S. It was contended that S, as the representative of R, was estopped from denying the validity of D's adoption, and thus having been a party to M's first suit, the question as to the liability of the mouzabs to satisfy the mortgage-lien was res judicata as against him. It was also contended that the five mouzabs should not be saddled with the whole of the mortgage debt, but that the mouzah in the hands of M should bear its proportionate part thereof. Held that, though B purported to execute the mortgage as guardian for D, though D was not the adopted son of A, the substance of the transaction and not the form had to be looked at, and as B had full power to alienate for legal necessity, the mortgage was still binding on the estate of A; and, further, that, even if there had been no legal necessity, having regard to the fact that it was made with the consent of R, the next reversioner, it equally created a valid charge upon the property, but that the mouzah in the hands of M must bear its share of the mortgage-debt, and that the decree of the lower Court was

167. ————— Adopted son's right to impeach alienation unnecessarily made by his adoptive mother before his adoption—Widow, Alienation by—Alienation from widow bound to inquire if legal necessity for alienation—Evidence—Onus of proving necessity for alienation by the widow.—The plaintiff claimed, as the adopted son of one K, to recover possession of his adoptive father's property, which had been mortgaged by his (K's) widow, B (defendant No. 1), to the third defendant, B, prior to the plaintiff's adoption by her. The property had come into B's possession incumbered with a mortgage effected by her husband, and, in order to redeem that mortgage, she mortgaged the property again to one F. She subsequently paid off F's debt, amounting to Rs. 629, and in 1876 she mortgaged the property for Rs. 999 to B, who was put into possession. In 1881 she adopted the plaintiff, and in 1882 the plaintiff brought this suit to recover the property. He contended that B had no power to alienate or mortgage the ancestral immovable property of her deceased husband, and he claimed, as the adopted son of K, to be entitled to the property free from the mortgages or other incumbrances with which B had attempted to charge it. For the defendants it was contended (inter alia) that the plaintiff could not impeach transactions effected by his adoptive mother prior to his adoption. Held that the plaintiff, as the adopted son of K, had a right to impeach the unauthorized transactions of his adoptive mother B, who possessed only a widow's restricted power of alienation. The plaintiff was adopted by B to her husband, who was the last owner of the ancestral property. The plaintiff at once succeeded to that property upon his adoption, and as heir of his adoptive father was entitled to object to any alienation made by B, on the principle that the restrictions upon a Hindu widow's power of alienation are inseparable from her estate, and their existence does not depend on that of heirs capable of taking on her death. Held also that the plaintiff was entitled to redeem the property on payment of such amount only as was raised by B for the purpose of meeting expenses necessarily incurred by her. Held, further, that the onus of proving the necessity for alienation lay upon B. The Court found that there was no evidence that any sum beyond Rs. 629, the amount of F's mortgage, was really required by B, and accordingly directed that the mortgage account should be taken between the plaintiff and B on the footing that the principal of the mortgage-debt was Rs. 629 only, instead of Rs. 999. LAKSHMAN BHAT KHOPKAR v. advanced money for the payment of Government revenue upon an estate under the management of a Hindu widow. The plaintiff's agent had received rents to a certain amount from part of the estate. Held that the plaintiff ought to have taken care that this sum was applied in part reduction of the debt to him, and that it must be deducted from the amount chargeable to the estate in the hands of the reversionary heir. HANUMAN PERSHAD PANDAY v. MUNRAJ KOONWARES, 6 Moore's I. A., 398, followed. The widow was borrowing in a case where it was for the plaintiff to see whether there was actually a ground of necessity for the loan. 169. ————— Burden of proving necessity where a Hindu widow attempts to alienate property held by her for her widow's estate.—In order to sustain an alienation of the property held by a Hindu widow for her widow's estate, it must be shown either that there was legal necessity for the alienation or at least that the grantee was led on reasonable ground to believe that there was. In a suit upon a mortgage of such property executed under the authority of a widow borrowing money, the point whether the loan was necessary was expressed in the issues in the form of a question how far the defendants' objections, grounded on the absence of necessity, were tenable. This was obviously an incorrect mode of trying the suit, because it assumed that it was for the defendants to show absence of necessity, and did not accord with the obligation upon a mortgagee, claiming under a widow, to prove a valid mortgage. It was sufficient to defeat the suit that upon the whole case there had been no proof of the lenders having fulfilled the legal obligation to inquire and satisfy himself that the widow, from whom he was taking a charge upon her husband's inheritance, had a proper justification for so charging it. HANUMAN PERSHAD v. 171. Mortgage of zamindari lands by zamindar's widow to secure her husband's debts—Appropriation of the assets of deceased towards payment of his debts.—In a suit on a mortgage of lands forming part of zamindari, it appeared that the zamindar died without issue, being indebted to the plaintiff, and that his widow subsequently borrowed money from the plaintiff for her own purposes, including litigation successfully prosecuted by her to make good her claim to the estate. The widow, being pressed for payment, executed the mortgage sued on, and afterwards paid to the plaintiff two sums, being the proceeds of the sale of her husband's jewels and of the execution of a decree in his favour realized after his death. These sums were appropriated to the payment of the widow's debt by the mortgagee, who, after her death, brought the present suit against the deceased zamindar's mother then come into possession of the estate, his undivided half-brothers being joined also as defendants. Held (1) that the widow was entitled to mortgage the estate for the payment of her husband's debts, and was not bound to discharge them out of income; (2) that the two payments by the widow of money belonging to the estate of the deceased zamindar should have been applied in liquidation of the husband's debts. *Herro Nath Rai Chowdhry v. 173. Estate of Hindu widow or daughter—Powers to alienate family estate—Ancestral family trade—Powers of manager.—The estate of a Hindu family, in which, after the death of the father and his widow, a daughter held an interest for life, comprised a family trade, carried on by a manager on her account. Held that the restriction upon her power to alienate remained the same, notwithstanding the trade, without being relaxed on that account. Justifying necessity or good grounds, after due inquiry, for belief in its existence would have been required to render valid an alienation made by her of the family estate. The case of a widow or of a daughter, under such circumstances, differs from that of the manager or head of an undivided family who manages an ancestral trade, and has a certain power to pledge for the requirements of the business. The validity of his charge, however, on the family estate where there is a minority or non-consent among the members of the family depends on proof that the charge was necessary or was believed to be so by the mortgagee after due inquiry. The manager appointed by the daughter, on whom the family estate has devolved, has no larger power to pledge the ancestral assets than his principal. It is not incumbent on the defendant who relies on the absence of legal necessity for the borrowing by a woman holding her limited estate to plead or to prove such absence; but it is for the plaintiff to state and to prove all that will give validity to the charge. *Amar Nath Sah v. Justifying necessity for her to encumber was not shown, nor enquiry by the mortgagee as to her authority. Even if the transaction had been properly explained to her, as a Hindu widow she would have exceeded her powers. By his will her husband had declared that his widow should have full powers, but that during the life of his minor son she should not have power to transfer without legal necessity; and that she should have power to mortgage to pay revenue and other debts. Held that the will conferred on her no greater power of alienating the family estate than she had under the Hindu law; and that, under the circumstances, the mortgage executed by her was invalid. Notes

177. — Grounds supporting charge on the inheritance by a widow for her debt—Obligation of purchaser to show nature of transaction—Necessity.—In transactions such as the alienation by a widow of her estate of inheritance derived from her husband, any creditor seeking to enforce a charge on such estate is bound at least to show the nature of the transaction, and to show that in advancing his money he gave credit on reasonable grounds to an assertion that the money was wanted for one of the recognized necessities. The principle is that the lender, although he is not bound to see to the application of the money, and does not loose his rights if, upon bona fide inquiry, he has been deceived as to the existence of the necessity which he had reasonable grounds for supposing to exist, still is under an obligation to do certain things. These are to inquire into the necessity for the loan and to satisfy himself as well as he can, with reference to the parties with whom he is dealing, that the borrower is acting in the particular instance for the benefit of the estate. This principle laid down in Hannuman Persaud Panday v. Baboo Munraj Koonverse, 6 Moore's I. Such a transaction may become valid by the consent of the husband's kindred, but the kindred in such case must generally be understood to be all those who are likely to be interested in disputing the transaction. 191. ———— Widow's estate—Conveyance by presumptive heir—Ratification by widow—Effect of witnessing deed on rights of witness—Evidence of consent.—During the lifetime of a Hindu widow, her son, the then presumptive heir to the property of which she was in possession, conveyed it to purchasers by deeds to which she was not a party. Subsequently she by separate deed ratified the conveyances. This deed was witnessed by a more remote reversioner. The son died during the lifetime of his mother, and the witness to the deed of ratification became the next reversionary heir. Held, in a suit by him after the widow's death for possession, that at the time of the conveyances the son had a mere contingent reversionary interest in expectancy, and that the subsequent ratification by his mother could not operate as a surrender of her estate so as to change the conveyances, and make them enure as absolute conveyances, but could only amount to a conveyance of her interest. Held also that the fact that the reversionary heir witnessed the deed of ratification did not in itself amount to evidence of consent to it on his part. RAM CHUNDER PODDAR v. (c) WHAT CONSTITUTES LEGAL NECESSITY.

193. — Legal necessity—Pious purposes.—Hindu law does not regard "pious purposes" as the only "necessary purposes" which justify alienation of inherited property by Hindu ladies. Self-maintenance, discharge of just debts, protection or preservation of the estate, may be regarded as such "necessary purposes" also. SOORJOO PRESHAD v. KRISHAN PESTAS BAHADOOR

[I. N. W., 49: Ed. 1878, 46

194. — Gift for pious and religious purposes.—An alienation by a Hindu widow of her deceased husband's estate for pious and religious purposes, made for her own spiritual welfare, and not for that of her deceased husband, is not valid. The power of a Hindu widow to alienate her deceased husband's estate for pious and religious purposes defined. Collector of Masulipatam v. Carali Tencata Narainappa, 8 Moore's I. A., 529, referred to. PURAN DAI v. JAI NARAIN

[I. L. R., 4 All., 462

195. — Endowment of idol by Hindu widow.—A Hindu widow cannot endow an idol with her husband's property or a portion thereof, to the detriment of the reversioners. KARTICK CHUNDER CHUCKERBUTTY v. GOVE MOHUN BOY

1 W. R., 46

196. — Pious purposes—Spiritual necessities.—Although pilgrimages and sacrifices performed by a Hindu widow may be indirectly beneficial to her deceased husband, they are not ceremonies indispensable for his spiritual benefit. A sale by a Hindu widow to raise money for pious acts, not in the nature of spiritual necessities, unless such sale is reasonable in the circumstances of the family and the property sold is but a small portion of the property inherited from her husband, is invalid. RAMA v. RANGA

I. L. R., 8 Mad., 552

197. — Pilgrimage.—Where a Hindu, by will, directed that his widow should have power to sell his property for the purpose of defraying the expenses of a pilgrimage, a bond fide purchaser from the widow who, at the time of purchase, believed and had reason to believe that the widow was going on a pilgrimage, and that the property was sold and the money raised for that purpose, is not bound to give back the property at the suit of the reversioner, if there is any evidence that the widow did really go on the pilgrimage. Per GARTH, C.J.—In such a case the purchase would be good even if there were no evidence that the widow

had gone on a pilgrimage. RAM KANT CHUCKERBUTTY v. CHUNDER NARAIN DUTT 2 C. L. R., 474

198. — Pilgrimage to Benares.—A pilgrimage to Benares is not a legal necessity to justify a sale by a Hindu widow. HURROMOHUN AUDHIKAR v. AULUCK MONER DOSSEK

[1 W. R., 252

199. — Expenses of pilgrimage to Gya.—Expenses incurred by a Hindu widow for a pilgrimage to Gya and for the performance of sradh are legitimate expenses for which she can alienate her husband's property. Where the amount expended was Rs. 1,700 and the property was sold for Rs. 4,000, Held, in a suit by the heir against the purchaser to have the sale set aside, that the plaintiff not having offered to repay Rs. 1,700 and interest, his suit must be dismissed. MUTTERHAM KOWAR v. CHOWDREY JUNMEJOY MULLICK v. RUSSOMOY DASS . 11 B. L. R., 418 note: 10 W. R., 209

200. — Pilgrimage never carried out—Debt barred by limitation.—The payment by a Hindu widow of her husband's debts, though barred by limitation, is a pious duty for the performance of which a Hindu widow may alienate her property. Chinnaji Gobind Godbole v. Dinkar Dhanoo Godbole, I. L. R., 11 Bom., 320, and Tarini Prasad Chatterjee v. Bhola Nath Mookerjee, I. L. R., 21 Cal., 190 note, followed. In the case of an alienation by a Hindu widow of her husband's property on the ground of legal necessity, the alienee is sufficiently protected if he satisfies himself by bond fide inquiries of the existence of such necessity, although he may be in fact mistaken. He has not to see to the application of the money. Where, therefore, a widow borrowed money for a pilgrimage to Gya to perform her husband's sradh ceremonies, but the pilgrimage was never made, the debt was held to be recoverable out of the estate. UDAI CHUNDER CHUCKERBUTTY v. ASHUTOSH DAS MO-SUMDAR

201. — Performance of husband's sradh at Gya.—The performance by a widow of her husband's sradh at Gya is a reasonable necessity for which she may alienate at least a portion of his estate. MAHOMED ASHBOF v. BROJESUREN DOSSEK

11 B. L. R., 119: 19 W. R., 499

202. — Sradh of husband—Marriage of daughter—Maintenance of grandsons—Payment of husband's debts.—The sradh of the widow's husband, the marriage of his daughter, the maintenance of his grandsons, and the payment of the husband's debts are admitted by Hindu law as legitimate grounds of necessity for alienations. LALLA GUNPUT LALL v. TOORUN KOONWAR. CHUNDER LALL v. LALLA GUNPUT LALL is, to justify a sale by a daughter to the prejudice of the daughter's son. RAJ CHUNDRA DEB BISWAS v. SHEESHOO RAM DEB 7 W. R., 146

204. ————— Money borrowed to defray grand-daughter's marriage expenses—Liability of reversioner.—A Hindu widow borrowed a sum of money for the purpose of defraying the marriage expenses of a grand-daughter, the child of a son who had predeceased his father. Held that such sum, although it could not properly be considered a charge on the grandfather's estate, yet was one which was legally recoverable from the heirs, who, on the death of the widow, succeeded to the possession of such estate. RAMCOOMAR MITTER v. IGRAHOYI DAS [I. L. R., 6 Cal., 38; 6 C. L. R., 429]

205. ————— Loan for investiture of minor.—Held (by GLOVER, J.) that where the family property was small, there was no reasonable necessity for contracting a large loan to provide for the minor's investiture according to the Hindu religion. DOORHATYAR ROY v. DULSINGAR SINGH [12 W. R., 367]

206. ————— Joint debt of husband and wife.—For a debt contracted jointly by a Hindu wife and her husband the husband's property is liable, and therefore the widow would be entitled to sell as much of the estate as was necessary to satisfy a decree for such a debt. GOLUCK CHUNDER PAUL v. 207. ————— Payment of debts of husband.—Debts due by the husband justify alienation by the widow. KOOL CHUNDER SUMMA v. RAMJOY SUMMONA 10 W. R., 6

208. ————— Debt provided for by lease of ancestral property.—The existence of a debt the liquidation of which is provided for by lease of ancestral property is no justification for alienation of such property by a Hindu widow during her life-tenancy. TILUCK ROY v. PHOOLMAN ROY [7 W. R., 450]

209. ————— Existence of debts—Re-purchase of family property.—Where the Court has expressly found the existence of debts, and that the sale of ancestral property was a bond fide one, the circumstance that there was no actual pressure at the time in the shape of suits by the creditors for the recovery of their debts is not of itself sufficient to invalidate the alienation. A sale of ancestral property merely for the purpose of procuring funds for the re-purchase of other property formerly belonging to the family cannot of itself be considered as a sale for any of the necessary purposes sanctioned by law. KAJIBUR SINGH v. ROOP SINGH [3 N. W., 4]

210. ————— Bond executed by wife to pay husband's debts.—A wife and her husband's brothers jointly executed a bond for the repayment of moneys borrowed to pay a debt due by her husband and his brothers, and to carry on the cultivation of lands held by her husband and his brothers, and hypothecated the family house as collateral security for the repayment of such money. Held that the wife was not justified in borrowing money to pay her husband's debt, and the want of money for cultivation of his lands would not justify her in pledging his credit for a joint loan taken by his brothers in which his liability would extend to the whole debt, nor would it justify her hypothecating his property, and the husband and his property were therefore not liable for the bond debt. PUR v. MARAHO PRASAD I. L. R., 8 All., 122

211. ————— Payment of time-barred debt.—The payment of a time-barred debt of her deceased husband is not a valid cause for the absolute alienation by a Hindu widow of her deceased husband's immoveable estate. MELGIRAPPA BIN SOLBAPPA TELI v. SHIVAPPA BIN KRAFFA [6 Bom., A. C., 270]

212. ————— Alienations by a widow of her husband's estate in order to pay his time-barred debts.—According to the Hindu law, a widow is competent to alienate her husband's estate for the purpose of paying his debts, even though they may be barred by the law of limitation. Her alienations for such a purpose are legal and binding on the reversionary heirs. CHIMNAJI GOVIND GODBOLE v. DINKAR DHONDEV GODBOLE [I. L. R., 11 Bom., 320]

213. ————— Revival of a barred debt by the widow of a deceased Hindu.—It is competent to the widow of a deceased member of a joint Hindu family, inasmuch as she represents the inheritance for the time being, and in whom it is a pious duty to pay her husband's debts, to bind the reversion by a mortgage executed to secure such debts, though they were barred at the time of its execution. KONDAPPA v. SUBBA [I. L. R., 13 Mad., 189]

214. ————— Debt of widow's own contracting—Consent of reversioner.—Semble—A sale by a Hindu widow for a just debt, made in conformity with the Hindu law and with the consent of the reversioner, may be valid, although the debt creating the necessity for the sale was a debt not of the ancestor's time, but of the widow's own contracting. SHOOSUNKUARE DOSSE v. CHAND MONEE DOSSE 7 W. R., 335

215. ————— Judgment-debt—Evidence of necessity.—A judgment-debt is prima facie proof of necessity. BHOWRA v. ROOP KISHORE [5 N. W., 89]

216. ————— Debts, Evidence of nature of.—Mere production of decrees will not establish the propriety and necessity of a sale of ancestral property. There should be evidence of the nature of the debts in which such decrees originated. BEOTKE SINGH v. RAMJEE 2 N. W., 50

217. ————— Sales of ancestral property.—The mere fact that sales of ancestral property took place in execution of decrees against the ancestor does not of itself show that the sales were for necessary or justifiable purposes. BHOJO KISHORE (GUGENDAN MOHAPATTA) v. HUKER KISHEN DOSS, 10 W. R., 57

218. ———— Obligation of widowed daughter-in-law in possession of father-in-law's estate to pay his debts—Sale of part of estate by her for that purpose—Suit by reversioner to have sale declared void beyond her lifetime—Widow not availing herself of protection of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act.—A childless Hindu widow, having succeeded to the estate of her father-in-law, sold a portion of it in order to pay off his debts. The estate was situate in a district in the Presidency of Bombay subject to the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879). The plaintiff as reversioner sued for a declaration that the sale was void beyond the lifetime of the widow. Both the lower Courts made the declaration prayed for by the plaintiff, on the ground that there was no necessity for the sale, as the widow might have availed herself of the provisions of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act. On appeal by the defendant to the High Court, Held, reversing the lower Courts' decree, that the sale by the widow should be upheld. She was not bound to avail herself of the relief afforded by the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act any more than of the provisions of the Limitation Act. The moral obligation which rested upon her to pay the debts of her father-in-law justified the sale. BHAU BHAJI v. JOPALA MANIPATI

219. ———— Decree for arrears of revenue—Right of widow to usufruct for her own purposes.—Where an estate devolved to a widow almost unincumbered, with an ample income more than sufficient to pay a small debt due by the husband, the Government revenue, and all other expenses including the marriage of daughters, the widow was held not to be justified by any legal necessity in alienating the estate in the absence of any actual pressure, such as an outstanding decree or impending sale for arrears of revenue. LALLA BYRNATH PRASAD v. BISSEN BEHARAI SARDY SINGH

[19 W. R., 80]

220. ———— Expenses of litigation—Fraudulent assignment—Suit to declare deed binding on reversioners.—A Hindu, R C, died possessed of considerable property, and leaving five sons. One of them died leaving a widow B. She brought a suit to recover her husband's share in R C's estate, together with the profits thereon. The suit was conducted by G R. A large amount became due to him for costs. To secure this, B executed a bond and warrant of attorney to confess judgment. The suit failed. In order to obtain the means of bringing another suit, B, by deed dated 4th April 1859 assigned her interest in the estate in the right of her husband, and all benefit to be derived from the suit to be instituted, to G—one-half absolutely, the other in trust to retain thereout what he might advance to her for maintenance and for the costs of suit with interest at 12 per cent. and to pay her the residue. In November 1859, G by deed sub-assigned to H S, in consideration that H S should undertake the maintenance of B and the management of the suit, retaining only five-sixteenths out of the eight-sixteenths assigned to him (G) absolutely. On 19th August 1861, B obtained a decree in the Supreme Court declaring her entitled to the accumulations on her husband's one-fifth share in the estate of his father R C, and to all profits made on such accumulations since her husband's death. In September 1861, G R caused judgment to be entered on the bond and execution to be issued, and the sheriff seized and was about to sell B's interest in the estate of her husband. Thereupon, B being entirely without means, P S, brother of H S, paid off G R, and in consideration thereof took an assignment by deed, dated 18th December 1861, in the name of one I S, from B, of five-eighths of the half share reserved to her by the deed of 4th April 1859, but subject to the assignment by that deed to G. On 20th December 1869, R84,685 were paid into Court as B's husband's share of the accumulations on R C's property at the date of his death, and R1,55,256 as the profits made thereon since her husband's death. P S now sued for a declaration that the deed of 18th December 1861 was binding upon B and the reversionary heirs, and for an order that the precise amount due to him be ascertained and paid to him out of the moneys paid into Court. At the trial he abandoned his claim against the R84,685 on the ground that he could not prove legal necessity on the part of B. Held the deed could be supported only so far as it charged the profits made since R C's death with the repayment of the R12,500 advanced, with interest at 12 per cent. P S was entitled to have that amount paid out of the R1,55,256 in Court. PANJALAL SEAL v. BAKASUNDARI 6 B. L. R., 732

221. ———— Litigation—Reversioner—Mitakshara law.—R, a Hindu widow, who had succeeded to the estate of her deceased husband, mortgaged a portion of it to L as security for the repayment of money which she borrowed from him for the purpose of suing for an estate to which her deceased husband had an alleged right of succession, which he had not, however, himself sought to enforce. This suit was dismissed. R subsequently transferred her deceased husband's estate to his daughter I. L sued R and I to enforce the mortgage made to him by R by cancellation of such transfer. Held that the mere fact that the mortgaged property had been transferred to I did not preclude her from contending, as next reversioner, that the mortgage of such property by R was void for want of "legal necessity;" that under the circumstances stated above there was not any "legal necessity," within the meaning of the Hindu law, for such mortgage, and such suit not having been for the benefit of the estate of R's deceased husband, consequently such mortgage was not valid so far as the reversionary right of I was concerned; that, however, I's right to the mortgaged property as transferee from R was subject to such mortgage. 222. ———— Litigation, Expenses of—Raising funds to carry on appeal to Privy Council.—A judgment-debtor, who had been permitted to retain possession of disputed property pending an appeal to England on furnishing security for means profits and costs, having died, his widow offered her life-interest in his estate as such security. Held that, as she was under no legal necessity to carry on the appeal to the Privy Council and did not do so for the benefit of the estate, she could not bind the estate as against the reversioner for the purpose of raising the necessary funds. PHOOL KOER alias KUNHYA KOER v. DABEERPRESHAD. 12 W. R., 187

223. ———— Legal expenses—Maintenance—Re-marriage of widow.—Legal expenses incurred by a Hindu widow in defending her life-estate in her husband's property constitute such a charge on the property as to make a sale thereof by her binding as against the reversioners. Where a Hindu widow is re-married, or is living with another man, it does not necessarily follow that she would not be entitled to sell her deceased husband's estate for her maintenance. AMJAD ALI v. MONTIAM KALITA. I. L. R., 12 Cal., 52

224. ———— Necessity to provide maintenance for herself.—A Hindu widow cannot alienate for any purpose property entrusted to her solely that from its profits she may maintain herself. SMITH GOBIN DASS v. BANCHORN alias RUGHOBERR. 3 N. W., 324

225. ———— Digging tank.—The digging of a tank, though a meritorious act and a great convenience to the public, is not a legal necessity for which a widow can alienate property left to her for life only. RUNJEET RAM KOOLAL v. MAHOMED WARIS. 21 W. R., 49

226. ———— Consent of husband—Declaration of legal necessity.—A deed of gift of ancestral property not being valid under Hindu law, without the consent of all the heirs, a wife is not bound by her husband's consent to a deed of gift to their children. The wife and husband being in possession, not beneficially for themselves, but for their children, the wife's acquiescence is not to be presumed by being in possession. A mere declaration of necessity is not sufficient to justify a purchase from a Hindu widow. GUNGAGOBIND BOSE v. DRUNNER. 1 W. R., 60

227. ———— Loan while administering estate of husband.—Where a plaintiff alleged that M, the deceased widow of S, a Hindu, while administering the estate of her deceased husband, borrowed money from plaintiff for purposes binding on the estate, and executed a promissory note to secure the payment of the same; and that the first and second defendants, as reversionary heirs of S and the third defendant, were in possession of the estate of S and refused to pay the debt incurred by M.—Held that the plaint was properly rejected as disclosing no cause of action against the defendants. *Gadappa Desai v. (I. L. R., 4 Mad., 375)

228. ———— Loan for supplying necessity.—Plaintiff sought to recover land sold by the first defendant, the widow of an undivided member of a Hindu family, and part of the consideration was the amount of a mortgage-deed executed for the purpose of supplying the necessities of the husband of the first defendant. In special appeal a decree fastening the amount of the mortgage-money upon the land was asked for. Held that such a decree ought not to be made, the plaintiff not having sought for that relief, and the suit having been so conducted that the genuineness of the mortgage instrument, though disputed, was treated as a subordinate matter. *MADAVA NAIKAN v. 229. ———— Liability of adopted son or of the estate in his hands for a loan raised by his mother for the benefit of the estate.—H, a widow, who, in default of issue to her husband, was in possession of his deshgati inam, borrowed money from the plaintiff on an ordinary bond for the purpose of paying the Government assessment thereon. She subsequently adopted a son (the defendant), and died. The plaintiff sued the son to recover the money from him personally, and also sought to make the deshgati inam liable. Held that the plaintiff could not recover his debt either from the defendant personally or from the deshgati inam in his possession. His only remedy was against H's property (if any) in the hands of the defendant. GADGAPPA DESAI v. APAJI JIVANRAO. I. L. R., 3 Bom., 237

(d) SETTING ASIDE ALIENATIONS, AND WASTE.

230. ———— Suit to set aside alienation by widow as tenant for life—Effect of petition as passing property.—By a petition filed in 1830, N, a Hindu, asked that certain property specified in a schedule to the petition which had up to date been in possession of himself and his ancestors, should be placed in the Collectorate book in the name of his daughter D. and that on her decease her daughters and other heirs should be heirs. In 1837, N acquired shares in a mouzah called K. He died in 1838, and the petition was subsequently held by the Privy Council to be a testamentary instrument.

D sold the shares in mouzah K, and invested the proceeds in another mouzah. In a suit by a son of D's daughter against the purchasers to set aside the sale by D, the Subordinate Judge held that he was bound, in the first instance, to repay the whole of the purchase-money to the defendants. He further held that the after-acquired property passed by the petition. The High Court upheld the first finding of the Subordinate Judge, but expressed a doubt (if not being necessary to decide the point, as there was no cross-appeal), whether the petition could pass after-acquired property. SHEWAK RAM v. BHOWANI BHASH SINGH. . . 6 C. L. R., 140

231. Suit to set aside alienation—Validity of alienation.—Where a Hindu brought up a boy, and, treating him as his son, purchased estates for, and in the name of, such son, but subsequently for some reason got his wife's name recorded in respect of such estates,—Held that, if the record of name in favour of the wife was effected during the minority of the son, it was invalid, or if otherwise, then the wife must be considered as having derived her title from the son and not from her husband, and in either case she was competent to transfer it to the son, and under such circumstances the transfer made by her was not illegal under the Hindu law. Now-BUT KAI v. BHAGMANEE. . . 2 Agra, 6

232. Alienation in contemplation of adoption.—The power of a Hindu widow, with authority from her husband to adopt, to make bond fide alienations which would be binding on the reversioners if no adoption took place, is not affected or curtailed by the fact that it is exercised in contemplation of adoption and in defiance of the right of the son who is about to be adopted. LAKSHMANA RAU v. LAKSHMIAMMAL. . . 1 L. R., 4 Mad., 160

233. Alienation by conditional sale.—Right to question validity of sale.—A conditional sale is an alienation, the validity of which a reversioner to a Hindu widow is by Hindu law entitled to question. ODIT NARAIN SINGH v. DHIRM MAHTOON. . . W. R., 1864, 263

234. Sale without legal necessity.—Reversioners.—R, a Hindu, had two daughters by his wife K. One daughter married S and died in K's lifetime, leaving two sons, the defendants. The other daughter was alive at the date of suit. On the death of her husband, K succeeded to his estate and sold some land to S without adequate necessity. S mortgaged this land to T. Held, in a suit by T after the death of S and K against the defendants to enforce the terms of the mortgage, that the defendants were entitled to object to the validity of the sale to their father by K, in their own right, in answer to T's claim. The restrictions on the father's power to alienate ancestral property are incidents of co-parcenary, whereas the right to sell possessed by a widow is but a qualified power given for certain specified purposes over the reversion created by law in favour of the ultimate male heirs. KARUPPA THEVAN v. ALAGU PILLAI. . . 1 L. R., 4 Mad., 162

235. Form of alienation.—Sale or mortgage.—Necessity.—There is no rule of Hindu law which compels a widow alienating a portion of her late husband's property to have recourse to a mortgage instead of to a sale to raise funds for her maintenance. The question whether she has exceeded her powers or not depends upon the necessities of the case. NARAKUMAR HALDAR v. BHARASUNDARI DEBI (3 B. L. R., A. C., 176)

236. Suit by reversioners to set aside deed of sale.—Necessity.—Selling larger part of estate than necessity justifies.—Sale where mortgage could suffice.—In a suit by reversioners to set aside a deed of sale by a Hindu widow of part of her husband's estate, on the ground that the money which it was necessary to raise could have been raised by other means, it was held that, if the widow sold a larger portion of the estate than was necessary to raise the amount which the law authorized her to raise, the sale would not be absolutely void as against the reversioners, who could only set it aside by paying the amount which the widow was entitled to raise with interest. Held also that, if a widow elects to sell when it would be more beneficial to mortgage, the sale cannot be set aside, as against the purchaser, if the widow and the purchaser are both acting honestly. PHOOL CHUND LALL v. RUGHMOON SUNDHAYE (9 W. R., 107)

237. Re-payment of purchase-money to set aside sale.—A sale by a Hindu widow of her husband's estate, under legal necessity, cannot be set aside upon payment of the amount which it was necessary for the widow to raise, or in the proportion which that sum bears to the amount for which the estate was sold. SUGENAM BRUM v. JUDDOBUN SUNDHAYE. . . 9 W. R., 284

238. Re-payment of sum spent for legal necessity.—Suit to set aside mortgage.—Alienation by daughter.—Legal necessity.—The daughter of a Hindu, while in possession of the paternal estate, borrowed a large sum of money under a mortgage of a portion of the estate. Part only of the money borrowed was devoted by her to the relief of legal necessity. After her death, the next heir sued the mortgagee to recover the property mortgaged, and to set aside the mortgage-deed. The Courts below gave a decree for possession to the plaintiff upon repayment of the amount actually spent in the relief of legal necessity. Such decree upheld on appeal. LALIT PANDAY v. SRIDHAR DEO NARAIN (5 B. L. R., 178; 13 W. R., 457)

239. Suit to set aside sale.—Sale for more than amount of necessity.—Ancestral debt.—Necessity.—A died leaving B, a grandson by a son deceased, C, the widow of another son deceased, and D and E, sons, him surviving. All four held separate possession of their respective shares in the estate. C sold her share for R995 to pay off a debt of A's of R670. D and E having waived their rights, B sued as reversioner to set aside the sale made by C. Held that C did no wrong in selling her share to pay off the debt, and the mere fact that she sold it for more than the amount of the debt did not render the sale invalid. LALA CHATHANARAIN v. UBA KUNWARI

241. ———— Waste—Reversioners—Manager.—Waste on the part of a Hindu widow in possession being proved, it is not competent to the Court to put the reversioner in possession, assigning maintainance to the widow. A manager should be appointed to the estate accountable to the Court. The reversioner may be appointed such manager. MAHARANI v. NUNDOLAL MISHRA

MAN. ———— Reversionary heirs.—A conveyance by a Hindu widow, for other than allowable causes, of property which has descended to her from her husband, is not an act of waste which destroys the widow's estate and vests the property in the reversionary heirs, and the conveyance is binding during the widow's life. The reversionary heirs will not be precluded, even during the lifetime of the widow, from commencing a suit to declare that the conveyance was executed for causes not allowable, and is therefore not binding beyond the widow's life; nor will the reversionary heirs be deprived, during the widow's life, of their remedy against the grantee to prevent waste or destruction of the property, whether moveable or immovable. *GOBINDMANI DAS v. [1 W. R., 256]

245. ———— Reversioners—Cause of action.—If reversioners can make out a distinct case of waste by the widow and of positive fraud by her on her husband's estate and on themselves, they may bring a suit to have the estate protected and to have the widow removed from the management. Reversioners can maintain such a suit even if they are not the nearest reversioners, if the nearer reversioner is implicated in the alleged fraud or waste. A reversioner cannot, during the widow's lifetime, get a declaration that he as next reversionary heir is entitled to succeed to the property on her death. SHAMA SOONDURSE CHOWDHRAIN v. JU-MOONA CHOWDHRAIN

246. ———— Widow refusing to have anything to do with property—Appointment of manager.—A Hindu widow held her husband's property till within twelve years of the date of suit. At that time one of the defendants claimed the property as belonging to his own separate talukh; and she thereupon gave it up, and ever since refused to enter on it. In a suit by the reversionary heir of the husband to have the title declared, and to obtain possession of the property, —Held that the possession of the defendant was adverse to the widow and reversioners; that the reversionary heirs, therefore, had a right to sue for a declaration of their title at any time within twelve years from the date of the adverse possession; that as the widow refused to have anything to do with the property, and the reversioners had no right to possession till after the death of the widow, the proper course for the Court to adopt was to appoint a manager to collect the assets of the estate, who should account for them to the Court; and the Court should hold them for the benefit of the reversionary heir. *RADHA MOHUN DHAB v. After the death of the widow, but in the lifetime of the mother, the next presumable reversioner sued to set aside the deeds and for possession. Held that the suit was good so far as it sought to set aside the deeds; and the mother having died before decree, that no objection could be taken to the suit on the ground that the decree gave possession to the plaintiff. *GOLAB SINGH v. 249. ————— Reversioners

—Payment of money out of Court to Hindu widow.—A decree was made in favour of K, a Hindu widow, in a suit brought by her against B C, which declared that she was entitled to one-fifth share of the accumulations of the estate of the father of her husband from his death to the death of her husband, to be held by her as a Hindu widow, and to one-fifth of the subsequent accumulations absolutely. Execution of the decree was taken out, and the sum to which K was declared entitled was paid into Court by B C in March 1869. MACPHERSON, J., in delivering judgment, expressed a doubt whether the suit was brought for the benefit of the plaintiff, and stated that he would consider any application to protect any rights the reversionary heirs might have in the amount received by the plaintiff. No steps, however, were taken by B C, by suit or otherwise, to protect the interests of the reversionary heirs in the sum paid into Court, but on K's applying in March 1871 to have the money paid to her out of Court, B C, on behalf of himself as reversionary heir, filed an affidavit in opposition to K's application, charging her on information and belief with leading an immoral life, and of having assigned half the amount in Court to H S, and expressing his apprehension of waste, and that, if the money were allowed to be taken out of Court, it would be lost to the reversioners. Held that K was entitled to have the money paid out of Court to her. *BISWANATH CHANDRA v. 250. ————— Suit by reversioners to set aside alienation—Necessity.

—A Hindu died in 1808, leaving five sons, and possessed of considerable property. In 1813, the four younger sons obtained a decree for partition against their elder brother, but themselves continued to live together as a joint Hindu family, and so did their widows after their death. After the death of the widow of one of the brothers, J D, the widow of another brother, brought a suit for partition; but subsequently, by the consent of all parties, the matters in dispute were referred to arbitration, and an award was made as follows: "Selling their (the widows') respective raiyati land, bati, or house, they will pay the costs of their respective vakeels; in that way the land, bati, or house that shall remain, with the proceeds belonging to their respective shares, the raiment and food of C D (the widow of another brother) and J D will be supplied during their lives; they will be unable to make a gift, sale, etc.; should the proceeds of the land, bati, or house not be sufficient for their food and raiment and for the purity of their respective husbands in a suitable manner, the jetta dharma, then showing good reason, regulation, conformably to the dharma shastra what is expedient as necessary according to usage, informing the other shareholders, they shall be able to sell the raiyati land, bati, or house of their respective shares." This award, which directed a partition according to the terms of a chinitnamah, or written description of the land, which was executed by all the parties, was made a rule of Court on 26th July 1858. J D took possession of her husband's share of the estate, some portion of which she alienated. In a suit brought by the reversionary heirs against J D and the purchasers of what she had sold, it was alleged that the alienations were without necessity and contrary to the award, and it was prayed that they might be declared void as against the reversionary heirs, and that J D might be restrained from further alienations. Held that the suit could be maintained in the lifetime of J D. As there was no waste proved, the prayer for an injunction to restrain further alienation was refused. KAMIKHAPRASAD ROY v. JAGADAMBA DASI

3. BREACH OF CONTRACT.

7. ———— Action for breach of contract.—Act XIV of 1840.—Act XIV of 1840 did not apply to contracts between Hindus. 4. GRANT OF LAND.

8. ———— Verbal grant of land followed by possession.—Validity of transfer.—By the Hindu law a verbal grant of real estate is good if followed by possession by the grantee. The grantors of real estate were Hindus and the grantees the East India Company. Held that, as the Hindu law which governed the grantor's rights allowed a verbal grant, the law of the grantees regulated the matter, and as there was possession under the grant by the grantees, the grant was valid. *DON D. HINDU LAW—CONTRACT—continued.5. HUSBAND AND WIFE—concluded.

Omnis of proof—Benami transaction.—A Hindu wife living with her husband brought a suit on a deed of mortgage executed in her favour. Held that to enforce her rights under the deed she need not join her husband. That it is not necessary for her to show by evidence that she has separate property or separate business. That in Hindu law there is no presumption that transactions which stand in the name of the wife are the husband's transactions. MANADA SUNDARI DABI v. MAHANANDA SARNAKAR [2 C. W. N., 367]

17. ——— Deed of separation—Agreement without consideration—Contract Act (IV of 1872), s. 25 (i).—By a registered deed executed by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff, his wife, after reciting certain quarrels and disagreements, none of which indicated such a condition of affairs as would warrant the wife, under the Hindu Law, in claiming a separate residence and maintenance from her husband, he promised to pay her for a separate residence and maintenance. On a suit by the wife for arrears of maintenance due, Held that there was no consideration moving from the wife, for the promise by the husband; it was a voluntary arrangement on the part of the husband, and the present suit could not be maintained. That s. 25 of the Contract Act did not apply, the consideration of natural love and affection being directly opposed to the recitals in the document. RAJLUKHY DABEE v. BHOOTNATH MOOKERJEE 4 C. W. 22. ——— Law in Guzerat—Priority—Registration—Notice.—The rule of Hindu law that a mortgage with possession takes precedence of a mortgage of a prior date, but unaccompanied by possession, does not apply to Guzerat. Where in Guzerat the defendant, a pious mortgagee, in possession had notice of plaintiff's prior mortgage, the defendant was held not entitled to claim the benefit of the above rule of Hindu law. Registration could not of itself alter this rule of Hindu law except so far as effect may be given to it by statute, and registration secures the same object which the Hindu law intended to secure by requiring possession, viz., notice to subsequent incumbrancers of the existence of a prior incumbrancer. ITCHARAW DAYARAM v. RAJJI JAGA 11 Bom., 41

9. NECESSARIES.

23. ——— Power of widow entitled to maintenance to bind heir for necessities.—There is no rule of Hindu law which recognizes any authority in a widow entitled only to maintenance to make contracts for necessary supplies binding upon the heir in possession of the family property and liable to maintain her. RAMASAMY AITAN v. MINAKSHI AMMAL 3 Mad., 409

10. PLEDGE.

By Hindu law a promissory note does not import consideration, and therefore, where it was proved that the defendant actually received only Rs. 700, that sum was all the plaintiff was allowed to recover. RAMLAL MOOKERJEE v. 14. TRANSFER OF PROPERTY.

28. Exchange of land—Necessity of written exchange.—By Hindu law an exchange of lands followed by possession need not be evidenced by writing. Sembie—In no case does the Hindu law appear absolutely to require writing, though as evidence it regards and inculcates a writing as of additional force and value. *MANTENA RAYAPARAJ v. 1. GENERALLY.

1. Nature of custom—Requisites of custom.—A custom is a rule which in a particular family or a particular district has from long usage obtained the force of law. It must be ancient, certain, and reasonable, and being in derogation of the general rules of law must be construed strictly. *HURPURSHAD v. SHEO DYAL. RAM SAHOY v. SHEO DYAL. BALMOKUND v. SHEO DYAL. 3. Operation of custom—Custom not judicially recognized, Authority of. A custom which has never been judicially recognized cannot prevail against distinct authority. NARABAMAL v. HALABAMA CHARLU . . . 1 Mad., 420

4. Effect of custom when proved to exist.—Where a custom is proved to exist, it supersedes the general law, which, however, still regulates all beyond the custom. SANTAJ KUMAR v. DEORAJ KUMAR . . . 1 L. R., 10 All., 272 [L. R., 15 I. A., 51]

5. Usage different from normal law and custom—Quere of peering usage.—When amongst Hindus (and Jains are Hindu dissenters) some custom different from the normal Hindu law and usage of the country in which the property is located, and the parties resident, is alleged to exist, the burden of establishing its antiquity and invariability is placed on the party averring its existence, and it should be proved by clear and unambiguous evidence above suspicion. Custom of adoption not in ordinary way set up. BHAGYANDAS TEJMAL v. RAJMAL alias HIRALAL LACHIMANDAS 10 Bom., 241

6. Evidence of custom varying general law.—Where it is sought to establish the existence of a custom, modifying or varying the general law, the kind of evidence that ought to be regarded is evidence showing that the right claimed by custom was more or less contested and the contest abandoned by some one who, if the custom had not existed, would have been entitled; or evidence showing that generally in the district the custom was followed to the exclusion of persons who, if it had not

7. Evidence of custom—Judicial decision.—Held that amongst Awarvala Banias of the Samogisect of the Jain religion, a widow has full power of alienation in respect of the non-ancestral property of her deceased husband; but that she has no such power in respect of the property which is ancestral. Held also that, where a custom alleged to be followed by any particular class of people is in dispute, judicial decisions in which such custom has been recognized as the custom of the class in question are good evidence of the existence of such custom. Shan Singh Rai v. Pakho, 6 N. W. 382; I. L. R., 1 All., 699, referred to. Chota Lal v. Channoo Lal, I. L. R., 4 Cal., 744, explained. Hoolas Rao v. Bhomani, unreported, referred to in 6 N. 2. ADOPTION.

8. Custom not allowing adoption, governing a family not subject to Hindu law—Construction of gift—Burden of proof—Inheritance.—A family in Bengal, affecting to be Hindu, but not Hindu by descent and origin, may be governed by customs at variance with Hindu law. A family took its origin in a tribe not Hindu, and its customs differed from Hindu customs. The question having arisen whether succession in virtue of adoption was consistent with, or was contrary to, the customs of the family, Held first that, with regard to the origin and history of the family, the point for inquiry was not whether the general Hindu law was in this case modified by a family custom forbidding adoption, but was whether, with respect to inheritance, the family was governed by Hindu law or by customs not allowing an adopted son to inherit; secondly, upon the evidence that this family had retained, and was governed by, customs at variance with Hindu law, and that, whatever Hindu customs might have been introduced into it, the custom of succession upon adoption had not. Whether, if the family had been shown to be Hindu out and out, save only special customs, the evidence would have been sufficient to prove a special custom was not the question. Held also in reference to the burden of proof that, in a suit brought to maintain the plaintiff's title as heir against a defendant, who relied upon an adoption as defeating the title of the plaintiff, the burden of proving the adoption to be permitted by the family custom was upon those who alleged it to be so; whereas, if the family had been generally governed by Hindu law, the onus would have been on those who alleged the exclusion of the right to adopt. Rajah Bishu Nath Singh v. Ram Churn Maimoadar, S. D. A., 1850, p. 20, referred to, as showing that even in a Hindu family there might be a custom which barred inheritance by adoption. PAVINDRA DEB RAIKAT v. RAJESWAR DAS

9. Adoption by untanned widow—Evidence of custom—Custom of caste—Opinion of caste expressed at meeting—Validity of adoption.—For the purpose of proving that by the custom and in the opinion of the Dalvadhva caste an adoption by an untanned widow was invalid, evidence was tendered to the following effect:—(1) that there had been many instances of adoption in the caste, and in every such case the adopting mother had undergone tonsure, and that there had been no instance the other way; (2) that the caste was divided in opinion as to the validity of the adoption, but that at a meeting of the caste it was declared by a large majority that the adoption was invalid. The Court refused to allow such evidence to be called, holding that it would merely prove what the Court, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, would assume to be the case, viz., that the widows of the caste usually or invariably followed the dictates of the Hindu ceremonial or religious law, which ordains that widows shall shave their heads, and that it would prove nothing more; and with regard to the opinion of the caste, that such opinion, even if expressed by a majority at a caste meeting, as it would not of course be binding upon the Court, ought not to affect its judgment. RAJJI VINAYAKRAY JAGANNATH SHANKERSETT v. LAKSHMINAI . . . I. L. R., 11 Bom., 381

10. Plurality of adoptions—Dancing girl caste—Immoral or illegal purpose of adoption. As a matter of private law, the class of dancing women being recognized by Hindu law as a separate class having a legal status, the usage of that class in the absence of positive legislation to the contrary regulates rights of status and of inheritance, adoption, and survivorship. A dancing woman adopted two daughters, of whom the latter was adopted in the year 1854. It was found that the custom obtaining among dancing women in Southern India permits plurality of adoptions. Held, on second appeal, that the daughter subsequently adopted succeeded to the adoptive mother in preference to the son of the daughter previously adopted. MUTTUKANU v. PARAMASAMI

[I. L. R., 12 Mad., 214]

11. Adoption by temple dancing woman—Right of adopted daughter—Right of suit—Adoption made with intention of prostituting minor—Penal Code, s. 373.—Suit by the adopted daughter of a temple dancing woman, deceased, to compel the trustees of the temple to permit the performance of a certain ceremony, in view to her entering on the duties and emoluments attached to the office of her adoptive mother. On second appeal, the High Court directed the return of a finding on the issue whether the plaintiff's adoption was valid—Fresh evidence was taken, and the finding was that the adoption was made with the intention that the girl should be prostituted while she was still a minor. Held that the suit was not maintainable on the ground that the adoption of the plaintiff was made with a criminal intention. KAMALAKSHI v. RAMASAMI CHETTI. I. L. R., 19 Mad., 127

12. — Adoption for illegal purpose

—Daradasi.—The plaintiff sued as the adopted daughter of a deceased dancing woman to recover a share of the property left by her. It appeared that the adoption of the plaintiff, which took place in 1871, when she was six years old, was made with the intention of bringing her up to practice prostitution even during her minority. Held that the adoption was invalid. SANJIVI v. JALAJAKSHI

13. — Adoption among Saraogi Agarwallas of Barh—Jains. Customs of, and law governing.—Where a custom to the effect that the widow of a soulless intestate (amongst the Saraogi Agarwallas of Barh) takes an absolute interest in his property is set up, it must be shown by the clearest and unvariable evidence that that particular custom applied to the particular place where the parties resided. Held in this case that no such custom had been proved to be prevalent amongst the Jain Agarwallas of the province of Bengal. Unless a custom be proved to the contrary, Jains are governed by the Hindu law of inheritance, and ordinarily the Mitakshara school of law would be applicable to them. Bhagvandas Tajmal v. Rajmal alias Hira Lal Lachmidas, 10 Bom. H. C. R., 241; Mahabhar Pershad v. Kundan Koer, 8 W. R., 118 followed. Steo Singh Rai v. Dakho, 6 N. W. P., 382, distinguished. MANDIT KOER v. 14. — Adoption by widow of Oswal Jain sect without authority of husband—Customs regulating personal rights and status of family—Effect of conversion from one sect of Hinduism to another.—The adoption of the tenets of another sect of Hinduism will not necessarily affect the laws and customs by which the personal rights and status of the family were originally governed; therefore, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the custom which enables a Jain widow of the Oswal caste to adopt a son without the express or implied authority of her husband will not be affected by the conversion of the family to Vaishnavism. Padmakumari Debi Chowdhurani v. 15. — Adoption, Caste custom prohibiting—Kadwa Kunbi caste at Ahmedabad—Conscience of the members of the caste—Nature of proof required—Uniform and persistent usage moulding the life of the caste.—A caste custom prohibiting widows from adopting is one which, before the Court can give judicial effect to it, ought to be established by very clear proof that the conscience of the members of the caste had come to regard it as forbidden. A caste custom having been set up in the Kadwa Kunbi caste at Ahmedabad prohibiting widows from adopting, a large number of witnesses were examined with respect to the custom. Their evidence showed that it had not been the practice in the caste for widows to adopt; but it also showed that there had been no caste resolution forbidding such adoption. On the other hand, it was established that there had been, as a matter of fact, two previous adoptions by widows which were not actually impugned, and that the adoption in dispute had been attested by a large number of patels in the caste. Held that the evidence, as a whole, led to the conclusion that "a uniform and persistent usage had not moulded the life of the caste." PATEL VANDRAVAN JESIBAN v. PATEL MANILAL CHUNILAL. I. L. R., 18 Bom., 470

16. — Power of soulless widow to adopt a son without permission of husband

—Jains—Saraogis.—Judicial decisions recognizing the existence of a disputed custom amongst the Jains of one place are very relevant as evidence of the existence of the same custom amongst the Jains of another place, unless it is shown that the customs are different; and oral evidence of the same kind is equally admissible. There is nothing to limit the scope of the enquiry to the particular locality in which the persons setting up the custom reside. Upon the evidence in the case, consisting partly of judicial decisions and partly of oral testimony, it was held that the custom that a soulless Jain widow was competent to adopt a son to her husband without his permission or the consent of the kinsmen was sufficiently established, and that in this respect there was no material difference in the custom of the Agarwallas, Churewals, Khandwals, and Oswal sects of the Jains; and that there was nothing to differentiate the Jains at Arrah from the Jains elsewhere. Held also that the terms Jain and Saraogi are synonymous. HARSHAD PRESHAD v. MANDIL DASS

3. AFFILIATION OF SON (ILLATAM).17. Status of affiliated son—

Illatam or affiliation of a son—Districts of Bellary and Kurnool.—The custom of illatam (affiliation of a son-in-law) obtains among the Mototi Kaps or Keddi caste in the districts of Bellary and Kurnool. He who has at the time no son, although he may have more than one daughter, and whether or not he is hopeless of having male issue, may exercise the right of taking an illatam son-in-law. For the purposes of succession, the illatam son-in-law stands in the place of a son, and in competition with natural-born sons takes an equal share. Quere—(1) Whether a father with a son living is entitled to exercise the right. (2) If the father is dead, whether the power may be exercised by a surviving paternal grandfather; and (3) whether the affiliation is effected by the introduction in the family or requires for its completion marriage with a daughter. (4) Whether the affiliation is analogous to Hindu adoption, except in so far that the illatam is regarded as member of the family into which he is admitted. (5) Whether the illatam can demand partition. HANUMANTAMMA v. RAMI REDDI [I. L. R., 4 Mad., 272]

18. ——— Rights of succession in his natural family.—Under the custom of illatam (affiliation of a son-in-law) which obtains amongst the Reddi or Peddi Kapu caste of Villure, the illatam son-in-law does not thereby lose his rights of succession to the estate of his natural father's divided brother. BALARAMI REDDI v. PERA REDDI [I. L. R., 6 Mad., 267]

19. ——— Illatam adoption—Inheritance.—There is no evidence that the custom of illatam adoption exists among the Kondarazu caste of the Vizagapatnam district. NARASIMHA RAO v. VEERABHADRA RAO . I. L. R., 17 Mad., 267

4. APPOINTMENT OF DAUGHTER.

20. ——— Power to appoint daughter—Onus of proof—Delegation of power.—The custom of Hindu law, under which a father, in default of male issue, might appoint a daughter to be as a son, or appoint her to raise a son for him, if not obsolete, as appears to be the opinion of the text-writers, is one which in modern times does not seem to have been brought under the consideration of the Courts of justice in India. Assuming the custom to exist, inasmuch as it breaks in upon the general rules of succession, whoever claims by virtue of it to succeed as heir must bring himself clearly within it. There seems to be no sufficient authority for holding that a father may delegate the power to appoint. JIBNATH SINGH v. COURT OF WARDEN . 15 B. L. R., 190 [23 W. R., 409; I. L. R., 2 I. A., 163]

22. ——— Expulsion of member of caste under mistake of fact and without notice.—In a suit relating to the management of the common property of the members of a Hindu caste, the plaintiff's right to sue was denied on the ground that, having violated the rules of the caste, he had been expelled from it. Held (1) that it was open to the Court to determine whether or not the alleged expulsion from caste was valid; (2) that if the plaintiff had not in fact violated the rules of the caste, but was expelled under the bona-fide but mistaken belief that he had committed a caste offence, the expulsion was illegal and could not affect his rights. Per KERNAN, J.—A custom or usage of a caste to expel a member in his absence without notice given or opportunity of explanation offered is not a valid custom. KRISHNASAMI CHETTI v. VIRASAMI CHETTI . . . I. L. R., 10 Mad., 133

23. ——— Powers of the head of a caste in respect of caste customs—Jurisdiction of Civil Court.—In a matter relating to caste customs over which the ecclesiastical chief has jurisdiction, and exercises his jurisdiction with due care and in conformity to the usage of caste, the Civil Courts cannot interfere. A guru as head of a caste has jurisdiction to deal with all matters relating to the autonomy of caste according to recognized caste customs. The Queen v. Sankara, I. L. 7. DISHERISON.

24. ——— Disinheritance in favour of son-in-law—Reddi caste—Illegal custom.—The custom of the Reddi caste, according to which a father-in-law may disinherit his heir in favour of a son-in-law, is bad. TAYUMANA REDDI v. PERUMAL CHETTI [1 Mad., 51]

8. ENDOWMENTS.

25. ——— Principle to be observed in dealing with Hindu endowments—Evidence of custom. The important principle to be observed by the Courts in dealing with the constitution and rules of religious brotherhoods attached to Hindu temples is to ascertain, if possible, the special laws and usages governing the particular community whose affairs have become the subject of litigation and to be guided by them. The custom and practice in such matters is to be proved by testimony. A zamindar claiming a customary right to grant confirmation of the election of a mohunt must prove the custom; an acknowledgment, taken in troubled times from the guardian of an infant mohunt, of a zamindar's customary right to control and remove the mohunt, is entitled to little, if any, weight as evidence of the custom. MUTTU RAMALINGA SETUPATI v. PERI-NAYAGUM PILLAI . . . I. L. R., 1 I. A., 209

26. ——— Dancing girls attached to a temple inheritance—Temple endowment—Succession to the office of a dancing girl connected with such temple—Public policy—Right of suit.—The existence in India of dancing-girls in connection with Hindu temples is according to the ancient established usage, and the Court would not be justified in refusing to recognize existing endowments in connection with such an institution. Accordingly, where the plaintiff sued, as the adopted daughter of a dancing girl attached to a temple, to redeem and have her right to manage the immo lands assigned as the remuneration for the temple office recognized, but her claim was rejected on the ground that the adoption could not be recognized by the Civil Court.—Held that the plaintiff's suit should be allowed. The lands in question were not claimed as being the property of the last incumbent, but as a part of the endowment of the temple of which she had been the manager. The alleged adoption only had effect as nominating the plaintiff to be successor in the management, and if it was the custom of the temple that the actual incumbent of the office of dancing girl in the temple should nominate her successor, the Courts of law could not refuse to recognize it, such custom being recognized in the country. TARA NAIKIN v. NANA LAKSHMAN

9. FAMILY, MANAGEMENT OF.

27. ——— Right to manage family — Family compact, Power of revocation of—Aliyasantana law—Yajaman.—The question whether, according to the Aliyasantana usage obtaining in South Canara, the senior member, male or female, or only the senior female, is the de jure yajaman (manager) of the family, is not concluded by authority and cannot be determined without evidence of usage. By a family compact (between all the members of an Aliyasantana family) in settlement of disputes in the family, it was agreed that the senior male for his life should enjoy the possession of the family land and protect the females. Held that the senior female, assuming that she was de jure yajaman, could not arbitrarily revoke this arrangement. DEVU v. DEVI
[I. L. R., 8 Mad., 353]

28. — Aliyasantana law — Yajaman
—The rights of the senior member of the family being a female.—The senior member of an Aliyasantana family, if a female, is prima facie entitled to the yajamanship; and, in the absence of a special family custom or a binding family arrangement to the contrary, the management of the family affairs by another member is to be presumed to be by the sufferance of the yajaman for the time being. MAHALINGA v. 10. IMMORAL CUSTOMS.

29. ——— Usages among dancing girls (naikins) — Usage as a source of law— Functions of Courts of law and of the Legislature in giving effect to usage—Judicial decisions giving effect to usage.—Although the Courts in India are bound by charter to recognize the "usages of the Gentus," they are not limited to the same sense of the word "usage" which shuts out all amelioration. The practices of an abandoned class are, no doubt, a usage in the sense of a tolerably uniform series of acts, but they do not therefore spring from a consciousness of compulsion, but rather from mere habit, imitation, and ignorance. Such usage is not a law, for over it

presides the higher usage of the community at large from whose approval it must have derived any conceivable original validity, and in opposition to which it cannot subsist; and as the community comes to recognize certain principles as essential to the common welfare, it will no longer lend its sanction to sectional practices at variance with the principles thus recognized. It is only according to the standards of the Hindu law that a usage has coercive force amongst Hindus; and what the Hindu law is, must, for the purposes of secular justice, depend on the general sense of the Hindu community. Although at one time in India the existence of companies of temple women may have been thought not so repugnant to the essential principles of the Vedic Code as to prevent their recognition as a source of law for themselves, it is not so at present. The popular sentiment would now no longer give validity to a usage of adoption among prostitutes, which devotes children, who are still infants, to a life of infamy. The whole constitution of the class of courtesans would, it is certain, be now regarded by the great mass of the Hindu community as essentially vicious. The laws or rules by which such an association endeavours to make itself and its mischievous influence perpetual would be deemed directly opposed to "the laws of God," and the usage itself, therefore, not as valid and coercive like a law, but as essentially invalid on account of its contravention of the law. A contrary opinion, if shown to have been held and acted on in a time gone by, could unhesitatingly be referred to error, and a practice founded on error and misconception does not by repetition become a customary law. A custom, in order not to constitute it such, but to give it coercive effect in particular instances, needs the sanction of the sovereign power waiting on the judgment of a Court. It is the function of a Judge, as a witness and as an expositor, to give a clear definition of the custom, usage, or rule as to which the opinion of the community has arrived at the requisite degree of maturity. It is the function of the State to enforce it when it is ascertained and pronounced upon by the Courts of law. Judicial decisions by which customs in India have been recognized are not to be regarded in precisely the same way as judicial decisions with reference to customs in England. In England what the Courts have definitely pronounced becomes by that very process a part of the common law, that is, of the law deriving its force from the custom of the realm or of the whole community. But in India it is usage, as such, to which the Courts are commanded to give effect. A custom, however, may be adapted and abandoned, and its recognition at a particular stage, by the Courts, as a usage cannot prevent this action of the class or community. If the usage is variable at the will of the community, it must be enforced in its slowly changing phases, or else the belief of the sovereign will eventually be defeated. As the mind of the community becomes enlightened, its legal convictions will change, and this will constitute a change in its common law, as that law must from time to time be recognized and recorded in the Courts. MATHURA NAIKIN v. KESU NAIKIN

30. ———— Immoral custom, Suit to declare existence of—Public policy, Custom contrary to.—In a suit by the dancing girls of a temple claiming to have by custom a veto upon the introduction of any new dancing girls into the service of that temple, and praying for an inquiry as to whether the dharmakarta of the temple was a fit and proper person to hold that office,—Held, dismissing the appeal, that, assuming that plaintiffs established that by the custom of the pagoda they had the rights they claimed, and that the custom in some respects fulfilled the requisites of a valid custom, the Court could not shut its eyes to the fact that by making the declaration prayed for it would be recognizing an immoral custom, viz., for an association of women to enjoy a monopoly of the gains of prostitution,—a right which no Court could countenance. CHINNA UMMAYI v. [I. L. R., 1 Mad., 168]

31. ———— Immoral custom, Suit to declare existence of—Hereditary office with endowments or emoluments attached, Suit to establish right to. The suit was brought by a dancing girl to establish her right to the mirasi of dancing girls in a certain pagoda and to be put in possession of the said mirasi with the honours and perquisites attached thereto as set forth in schedules to the plaint annexed. The defendants denied the claim. The District Munsiff, finding that the claim had been established, decreed for plaintiff, but, on appeal by the first defendant, the District Judge dismissed the suit on the authority of Chinna Ummayi v. Tegarai Chetti, I. L. R., 1 Mad., 168. On second appeal,—Held that the present case was distinguishable from that of Chinna Ummayi v. Tegarai Chetti, in that there was no allegation in that case of any endowments attached to the office. That in this case the question of the existence of a hereditary office with endowments or emoluments attached to it ought to be inquired into, as that would materially affect the question of whether plaintiff had sustained injury by the interference of the first defendant. KAMALAM v. 11. IMPARTIBILITY.

35. ———— Impartible estate—Partition, Right to. A custom of impartibility must be strictly proved in order to control the operation of the ordinary Hindu law of succession. The fact that an estate has not been partitioned for six or seven generations does not deprive the members of the family to which it jointly belongs of their right to partition. DORAYAO SINGH v. [13 B. L. R., 165; 16 W. R., 142

36. ———— Custom as to collateral succession.—That an estate is impartible does not imply that it is separate and so to be governed by the law applicable to separate succession. Whether the general status of a Hindu family be joint or divided, property which is joint will follow one, and property which is separate will follow another, course of succession. Since in documents between Hindus and in the Mitakshara itself it is not unusual to find the leading members of a class alone mentioned when it is intended to comprehend the whole class, a written statement of a family custom, whereby an impartible estate passes, in the event of the holder dying without issue, to his younger brother or his eldest son, need not be construed as limiting the collateral succession to the two cases named, but as providing generally that on failure of the direct male line the nearest male heir in the collateral line shall succeed. CHINTAMUN SING v. 37. ———— Mitakshara law, Custom inconsistent with.—B S, the father of the plaintiff, who was in possession of an estate in Lohardugga, which had been granted to his ancestor by the Raja of Chota Nagpore, was, on the 10th December 1857, after proceedings taken under Act XXV of 1857, declared to be a rebel, and it was ordered that all his property should be forfeited to Government. On the 16th April 1858, B S having been arrested was tried and convicted on a charge of rebellion, and sentenced to death. The sentence was carried out on the 21st April 1858, and an order was made on the same day by the Deputy Commissioner for the confiscation of his property. On the 1st April 1872, a suit was instituted by the plaintiff, then a minor, to recover possession of the estate of his father B S. In his plaint he alleged that the estate was granted to the ancestor of B S for his maintenance, and was, by the terms of the grant, to devolve, on the death of the original grantee, on the nearest male heir, and so on in perpetuity; and that no holder had any interest beyond his own life, and had no power of alienation. In his written statement it was alleged that the descent of the estate was governed by Mitakshara law, modified by the usage and custom of the family, by which the estate was impartible and descendible, according to the law of primogeniture, on the male heirs of the original grantee; and that, by the Mitakshara law so modified, the plaintiff became on his birth co-owner with his father in the estate, and on his father's death became entitled to it, notwithstanding the sentence of confiscation pronounced against B S. Held on the case made by the plaint that the estate was not shown to be inalienable; the fact that the grant was for maintenance, and to the heirs male of the original grantee, would not render it so. Held on the case made in the written statement that the Mitakshara law did not apply to the case; that law by which each son has by birth a property in the paternal or ancestral estate is inconsistent with the custom that the estate was impartible and descended to the eldest son. KAPILNATH SAAHAI DEO v. 38. Presumption as to impartibility—Burden of proof—Desugat vatan held by descent.—In a suit for the partition of part of a desugat vatan, brought by the younger brothers of a joint Hindu family against their eldest brother the desai, the defence was that the vatan was held by him as an impartible inheritance, subject to a right by custom that a brother should receive maintenance out of the income derived from it. Held that there was no such general presumption in favour of the impartibility of estates of this kind as to shift the burden of proof which was upon the desai to show that the vatan had, contrary to the general Hindu law, been inherited by him alone. It was for the desai to show by evidence of the nature of the tenure of the vatan that it was impartible, or to show by evidence of family custom or of district, i.e., local custom, that impartibility attached to it, such evidence being strong enough to rebut the presumption of the prevalence of the general Hindu law. Where the defendant in a suit for the partition of a desugat vatan held the hereditary office of desai and the vatan was properly appertaining to the office, the decree for partition was accompanied by a declaration that it was made without prejudice to the right of the desai to any income payable out of it, for the performance of his duties to which he might be entitled under any law in force. ADRISHAPPA v. 41. Customary law of inheritance of certain zamindari in and about Madras—Impartible raj.—The principal issue on this appeal was whether the defendant was entitled by a custom prevailing in the Saptur zamindari, and in other zamindaris held by zamindars of the same caste connection in Madras, and neighbouring districts, to inherit the impartible raj estate of that, the Saptur, zamindari in preference to the plaintiff. Both the parties were sons of the late zamindar, being half-brothers, sons of their father by different mothers. The plaintiff was the elder of the two, but the mother of the younger had been married by the zamindar before his marriage with the mother of the elder. In virtue of his seniority the elder brother claimed. The younger defended the suit on the title that his mother's marriage with the raja had preceded the marriage of the plaintiff's mother, alleging the custom to prevail in the zamindari as above stated. The Courts below, having considered the evidence, found that the custom was proved in concurrent judgment. Held that no error having been shown, and the Courts having decided with reference to what was laid down in Ramalakshmi Ammal v. Sivananthu Perumal Sethurayar, 14 Moore's L. A., 570, as to the requisites for the proof of such a custom, the findings below were conclusive as to its existence. SUNDARAJINGA SAMI KAMAYA NAIK v. 42. Right of possessor of impartible estate to alienate.—There is no such co-parcenary in an estate impartible by custom as, under the law of the Mitakshara governing the descent of ordinary property, attaches to a son on his birth. The son's right at birth, under the Mitakshara, is so connected with the right to share in and to obtain partition of the estate that it does not exist independently of the latter right. Where a custom is proved to exist, it supersedes the general law, which, however, still regulates all beyond the custom. In regard to a raj estate in Gorakhpur, by custom impartible and descending by primogeniture, the family being in other respects governed by the Mitakshara law, the present raja's alienation of part of that estate was alleged by his son to be invalid as against him. Held that, if there had been no custom of impartibility, the raja's power over the estate would have been restricted by the law declared in Mitakshara, Chap. 1, s. 1, v. 27, and the gift would have been void. But, there being the above custom, the question was how far the general law was superseded, and whether the right of the son to control the father's act in this respect was beyond the custom. Held that in regard to impartible estate the son's right at birth did not exist where there was no right on his part to partition; also that inalienability depended on custom or on the nature of the tenure. In this case, the evidence did not establish that by custom the estate was inalienable. SARTAJ KUARI v. DEORAJ KUARI. I. L. R., 10 All., 272 [L. R., 15 I. A., 51]

43. Impartible raj—Custom of inalienability. Evidence of—Right of possessor of impartible estate to alienate Dayadi pattam.—The holder of the impartible palayam of Annay-anayakannur transferred his estate to his wife by a deed of gift. The transferor had besides a son numerous dayadis, and some of the latter now sued for a declaration that the gift was not binding on them. The law of succession admittedly applicable to this palayam was the rule of dayadi pattam, according to which the person entitled to succeed on the death of a palayagar is the senior in age of his dayadis, descended from one of three brothers who originally formed a joint family together and were the founders of three lines in the family. The person entitled under this rule to inherit on the death of the transferor was one of the plaintiffs in the suit. It was contended that the palayagar had no proprietary right in the estate, but held the office of manager merely; but this contention was overruled. It was further contended that the estate admittedly impartible was by custom inalienable also. Held on the oral and other evidence adduced in the case, and with reference to admissions made by the transferor and to his conduct, and on its appearing that eight out of the nine predecessors of the transferor had left either sons or widows, but nevertheless that for three centuries there had been no sale or gift, that the custom of inalienability was established, and that the gift in question was accordingly invalid as against the plaintiffs. Sartaj Kuari v. 44. ——— Impartible raj not necessarily inalienable—Mitakshara law.—If amongst Hindus governed by the law of the Mitakshara a raj happens to be impartible and governed by the rule of primogeniture, it does not therefore follow that it is inalienable. The condition of inalienability depends upon special custom, or, in some cases, upon the special tenure of the raj, and must be clearly proved. Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari, I. L. virtue only of its impartibility, in the absence of proof of a custom having the force of law, or of some tenure attaching to the zamindari, rendering it inalienable. Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari, I. R., 15 I. A., 51; I. L. R., 10 All., 272, a case which is applicable in Madras, decides that where there is an impartible estate descending by primogeniture, and in other respects the Mitakshara governs the rights of the parties, the eldest son does not become a co-sharer with his father, and decides that the inalienability of the estate would depend upon custom which must be proved, or in some cases upon the nature of the tenure attaching to the zamindari. Held that there was no proof in this case of a custom which the Courts could recognize as having the force of law, not resting on the Mitakshara, but argued to have been established by a long course of decision in the Madras Courts, against the validity of absolute alienation of an impartible zamindari. Held also that this was not a case to which should be applied the doctrine that where there is a long course of decision, that course should be supported, and the law not altered. And held that, inasmuch as here there was no co-parcenary subsisting between the zamindar and any member of his family in the estate, the zamindar had power to alienate it, and that he might exercise that power by will. VENKATA SRYA MAHIPATI RAMA KRISHNA RAO v. 47. ——— Family customs—Rajputs—Primogeniture—Evidence of converging probabilities. In a Rajput family, of a clan named Jadon Thakur, long settled near Agra, holding an ancestral taluk of zamindari villages, and having their principal dwelling-place in one of such villages, the question arose whether, by a family custom, their ancestral property descended as an impartible estate, to be possessed by the eldest son of the last inheritor, or descended as an ordinary estate, under the Hindu law, to be held jointly by the sons, each having the right to claim partition. The second of a joint family of three sons now sued the elder, the youngest being a co-defendant, but not taking either side. The evidence established a family custom that the ancestral property should descend as an impartible estate, and should be possessed by a single heir at a time, who should be the eldest son. All the lines of evidence, of differing degrees of value, converged towards the same result, the existence of this custom of impartibility, and of primogeniture. Perhaps no one of these lines, taken alone, would have been conclusive in

50. ————— Onus probandi—Customs varying ordinary course of descent.—An action was brought by the members of a junior branch of the family of the Maharaja of Chota Nagpore to recover possession of a fourth share of certain moveable and immoveable properties which originally formed part of an estate granted to one A S, a junior member of the family, for his maintenance by a former Maharaja. On A S's death, the eldest of his surviving sons succeeded to the thakoor's guddee, and one of his younger sons, B S, the admitted common ancestor of the parties, obtained a portion of that estate for his maintenance, including the properties in dispute, and the last person seized of them until her death was L S as the representative of her deceased husband, D N. The plaintiffs' case was that D N having died without issue, all the properties ought, "according to the Hindu shasters and the custom of the family," to be divided equally between all the surviving male descendants of the common ancestor, defendant's answer being that, "according to the long established custom of the family of B S, he (the defendant) as the representative of the eldest branch thereof was entitled solely and exclusively to the properties in dispute." Held that the burden of proving the affirmative lay upon the plaintiffs, whose claim was not based upon the ordinary Hindu law of inheritance, but upon a special custom without reference to the claimant's position in the family or their capability to satisfy the conditions of heirship. Held also that, as according to the custom in the eldest branch of A S's family the property left by a childless member devolved on the eldest or the guddee thakoor, and as the defendant's position in B S's branch of the family was similar, i.e., that of a thakoor, he had every right to contend that the same custom must be presumed to obtain in both until the contrary was proved. JETHNATH SAKSHI DEO v. The parties belonged to the bogam caste, residing in the Godavari district. The defendant pleaded that the property had been acquired by her as a prostitute, and denied the plaintiff's claim to it. The plaintiff obtained a decree for Rs 100, being a moiety of the property found to have been left by their mother. Held, on the evidence as to the local custom of the caste, that the decree was right. Under Hindu law, a family usage or custom, when clearly proved, outweighs the written text of the law. But the greatest care must be exercised in accepting the alleged usage or custom as proved. When it is a family custom, the evidence must clearly show that it has been submitted to as legally binding, and not as a mere arrangement by mutual consent for peace or convenience. Any special rule of inheritance proved to exist in a Hindu family, and which is ancient, uniform, and reasonable, and not repugnant to the fundamental principles of Hindu law, should not be refused recognition. In 1880, the plaintiffs, who were divided collaterals of H, sued to recover the lands alleging that they succeeded thereto on the death of H, widows and daughters being excluded from inheritance according to the custom among the Gohel Girasia. The lower Courts found that the lands were never in plaintiff's possession; that M held them till December 1882, since which time defendants 1-3 had them in their enjoyment as purchasers from her; that the custom proved excluded daughters, but not widows, from inheritance; and that the claim was within time, having been made within twelve years of the death of M. On second appeal to the High Court,—held (1) that the alleged custom excluding daughters was not proved; (2) that the plaintiffs should not have been allowed to shift the basis of their claim from an alleged custom which excluded both widows and daughters to one which only excluded daughters; (3) that since limitation must be applied to the plaintiff's claim as they made it, and tried to prove it, M's possession was adverse to them, and, being for more than twelve years, barred the suit. Basara v. 59. ——— Khoja Mahomedans—Succession—Letters of administration.—In the absence of satisfactory proof of a custom, differing from the Hindu law, the Courts of this Presidency apply to Khojas the Hindu law of inheritance and succession. If a custom opposed to Hindu law be alleged to exist amongst Khojas, the burden of proof rests upon the person setting up that custom. The Khojas, having been originally Hindus and converted from the Hindu religion by a dai, or missionary of the Imam of the Ismailis, to the Mahomedan religion of the Shia division and Imami Ismaili sub-division, and being partly regulated by Mahomedan law, partly by Hindu law, and partly by custom, occupy a position so peculiar that the Courts do not apply to them, when seeking to prove a custom of inheritance or succession, differing from the Hindu law, the stringent rule that the custom must be proved to be ancient, invariable, and submitted to as legally binding, but will act upon satisfactory evidence that it has been the general custom and accepted as such by the great majority of the Khoja community. A Khoja, having died intestate and without leaving issue, was survived by his mother (a widow), his wife, and a married sister. Held that, according to the custom of the Khojas, his mother was entitled to the management of his estate and therefore to letters of administration in preference to his wife or his sister. HIRABAI v. Where family custom required the union of two things to constitute the legal heir, viz., seniority in age and nearness of kin, and the claimant has but one of these qualifications in himself, viz., seniority, he does not entitle himself to succeed. XI of 1793 and X of 1800.*—In a suit to recover possession of an estate by virtue of an alleged family custom, under which the estate was descendible to the eldest son to the exclusion of the other sons, and was impartible and inalienable, it was uncertain what the nature or origin of the tenure of the estate was, but there had been admittedly a settlement of it by Government at the time of the perpetual settlement. Held, assuming the custom to have existed that, although by such settlement any incidents of the old tenure of the estate were impliedly at an end, yet the settlement did not of itself operate to destroy the family usage, even though the origin of it could not be shown. Quere—Whether Regulation XI of 1793 or Regulation X of 1800 would govern a case where the claim rested only on a continuing family usage? Held on the evidence that from the acts of the members of the family the manner of succession to the estate, even if it prevailed as alleged, was probably not regarded by them in the light of a family custom, but as one of the incidents or conditions of tenure, and that since the settlement by Government the family had considered all these incidents at an end, and had treated the estate as an ordinary estate held under the Government, and subject to the ordinary laws of succession. Assuming the custom to have existed, it was of a nature which could, without any violation of law, be put an end to. There appears to be no principle or authority for holding that a manner of descent of an ordinary estate, depending solely on family usage, may not be discontinued, either accidentally or intentionally, so as to let in the ordinary law of succession. Such family usages are in their nature different from a territorial custom, which is the lex loci binding all persons within the local limits in which it prevails. RAJKISSEN SINGH v. In 1873 R died, and on her death M procured the registration of his name in respect of her one-third share, it having been previously decided in proceedings by the settlement officer that the name of each claimant should be registered in respect of a one-third share. In 1879 B sued M for possession of the one-third share held by him claiming as heir of her deceased husband D, and alleging that M was not the legitimate son of D, and therefore not entitled to succeed to such rights. M set up as a defence that he was the legitimate son of D, and therefore entitled to succeed; and that, assuming he was not legitimate, he was entitled to succeed by the custom of the village. In support of such custom, M relied on the following entry in the village wajib-ul-ur:—"In this village a mistress treated as a wife and the child of such a mistress shall also have a right to transfer property and to obtain and receive property." Held M was illegitimate. Held also, with reference to the entry in the wajib-ul-ur, that it did not necessarily place illegitimate children on an equality with legitimate as heirs; and if that was its intention, it was ineffectual, as parties could not by agreement alter the law of succession; and if the entry was regarded as evidence of custom, it was not conclusive. BHAONI v. The defendant claimed to be legitimate according to the customary law governing the family, although his parents might not have been married at the time of his birth, by reason of his parents having performed the ceremony of pariya before his birth. Held that the performance of such ceremony did not make a legal marriage, that the defendant was illegitimate, and that the plaintiffs were accordingly entitled to one-half of the lands in question, and the defendant was entitled to the other half. 78. ————— Partition of deshpande vatan—Presumption as to impartibility of vatan—Cessation of duties attached to a vatan.—It had been the practice in a deshpande vatanadar's family extending over a century and a half, without interruption or dispute of any kind whatever, to leave the performance of the services of the vatan and the bulk of the property in the hands of the elder branch, and to provide the younger branches with maintenance only. Held that such practice, being more probably due in its origin to a family or local usage than to a mere arrangement determinable at the will of any members of the family, ought to be recognized and acted upon as a legal and valid custom. RAMRAO TRIMBAK DESHPANDE v. YESHVANTRAO MADRASAVRAO DESHPANDE . . . I. L. R., 10 Bom., 327

79. ————— Deshmukhi vatan, Impartibility of—Partition, Suit for, of such vatan.—In the middle of the seventeenth century one Veduji, the ancestor and founder of the family of the parties to the suit, then called the Mhaske family, acquired a deshmukhi vatan originally consisting of eight chavurs of inam land, which was afterwards equally divided between the two sons of Veduji, who became the heads of separate branches of the family, called, respectively, the Pimparne and the Jakhorikar branches, of which the former was the elder. In the latter part of the seventeenth or early part of the eighteenth century the elder branch further acquired six chavurs of land. The parties to the suit were brothers and belonged to the elder branch. In the middle of the eighteenth century disputes arose between the Jakhorikar branch and Trimbakrav, the then eldest representative of the Pimparne branch, in respect of the liability to partition of the emoluments, dignities, and property appertaining to the said vatan, and a decree was passed by the Peishwa, Raghunath Bajirav, to the effect that the representatives of the Jakhorikar branch should keep the inam lands they had, and continue to receive as before money for defraying the expenses of weddings and other household matters, but should have nothing further to do with the vatan, which, with the "right of eldership," was to be enjoyed by the sons, grandsons, and descendants of Trimbakrav in succession. The subsequently acquired six chavurs of land, two of which were situated at Pimparne and the remaining four at Ambhara, described as sadhmukh, had been always spoken of and

dealt with as connected with the vatan and the original eight chavurs, and had been enjoyed for a hundred or hundred and fifty years by Trimbakrav and his ancestors free from any right of the branches, and this mode of enjoyment was recognized and affirmed by the authorities in the sanads, and also, subsequently, by the British Government. The plaintiff, who was one of the three sons of Gopalrav, now deceased, sued his eldest brother, Trimbakrav alias Bajirav, and his second brother, Balvantrav, for partition into three equal shares of the property appertaining to the deshmukhi and patilki vatan. Trimbakrav, the first defendant, resisted the suit on the ground that by the custom of the family he as the eldest son took the vatan and the property appertaining to it, subject only to allotments for maintenance of the younger brothers. The Court of first instance found the alleged custom proved, but with the consent of the first defendant awarded ₹700 to the plaintiff as his third share of the immoveable property. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court, and contended (inter alia) that the Peishwa's decree related to the original eight chavurs only, and not to the subsequently acquired six chavurs, and that the younger members of the Pimparne branch were not bound by that decree. Held that the plaintiff's claim to partition of the deshmukhi vatan, including the six chavurs, should be disallowed, the existence of the "custom of eldership" as alleged by the first defendant, being satisfactorily established by the documentary as well as other evidence—a custom which the Jakhorikar branch unsuccessfully endeavoured to repudiate, but which the younger members of the Pimparne branch had throughout recognized until the present suit; and the fact that the assessment and other dues, as well as all the allotments, had been always paid by the eldest member of the Mhaske family was a strong circumstance in corroboration of the first defendant's allegation. The circumstances that services incidental to the vatan had been abolished could not affect the title of eldership of the first defendant as established by custom. Held also that plaintiff's claim to the inam land and the patilki vatan should be allowed, there being no evidence of a custom of primogeniture as regards them, nor were they connected with the deshmukhi vatan. Decree varied by directing the partition of the inam land and patilki vatan. GOPALRAV v. TRIMBAKRAV . . . I. L. R., 10 Bom., 598

80. ————— Evidence and proof of custom of primogeniture—Enjoyment of property consistent with alleged custom.—Held on the evidence, reversing the judgment of the High Court, that the appellants had satisfied the serious burden of proving a special family custom of descent by primogeniture. The evidence showed that for a period of nearly eighty years from the time of the British occupation of the district in which lay the estate in suit, the enjoyment had been consistent with the alleged custom, and for the earlier and greater part of that term had been inconsistent with any other legal basis. Also that in two other families in the same district, derived from the same

12. Liability of joint estate for separate debts.—Assets in hands of heir.—The divided share of a Hindu in property which previously belonged to the united family is, after his decease and while yet in the hands of his heir, assets for payment of the debts of the deceased. The whole of the family undivided estate would generally, when in the hands of the sons or grandsons, be liable for the debts of the father or grandfather, and previously to the passing of Bombay Act VII of 1866, the sons and grandsons were personally liable for the debts of the father and grandfather, whether they received assets or not. But there is no authority for the converse, viz., that the father or grandfather is responsible for the debts of his son or grandson independently of the receipt of assets, unless he promise payment. The proposition of Hindu law that debts follow the assets into whose-soever hands they come must, generally speaking, be confined to separate estate, and the liability of undivided ancestral estate in the hands of sons and grandsons to the debts of the father or grandfather is exceptional. UDARAM SITARAM v. RATU PADAJI . . . 11 Bom., 76

13. Inheritance.—Minor.—Liability of son for father's debts.—Bom. Act VII of 1866.—In the Presidency of Bombay, under the provisions of Bombay Act VII of 1866, where a Hindu dies intestate leaving property, his son is liable to his (the father's) creditors to the extent of the value of the property, although the property may not have come into the son's possession, but remains in the hands of third persons. The father having left property, the son may recover it if it has been taken against his assent, and he ought to do so to enable him to discharge the first duty of a Hindu to his deceased father. So long as he takes no steps, it is to be presumed that the property is held with his assent. He may reclaim it if he will, and thus it is held to his use within the meaning of s. 2 of Bombay Act VII of 1866. KEVAL BHAGVAN v. GANPATI NARAIN . . . I. L. R., 8 Bom., 220

The creditor has no lien on the estate preferential to him who takes the estate in pledge from the heirs, nor can he, after the alienation thereof by heirs for a bond fide and valuable consideration, follow it in the hands of the alienee. In a suit brought by the creditor against the heir of the lady and the reversionary heirs of her father's estate (into whose hands the estate had passed), he asked for a decree—(1) against the estate in the hands of the reversioners; and (2) sought for payment out of the rents uncollected in the lady's lifetime, or in the alternative that the lady's personal estate might be held liable. On a reference being made to a Full Bench as to whether the plaintiff could enforce his claim against the estate in the hands of the heirs of Raj Chunder generally or as against the amount of rents, which accrued due to the lady, and which remained uncollected,—Held by MITTAL, McDONELL, and PRINSEP, JJ. (GARTH, C.J., and WILSON, J., dissenting) that the plaintiff was certainly entitled to be paid out of the arrears of rent since collected, but that he also was entitled to enforce his claim against the heirs of the last full owner of the estate generally. *HUREY MOHUN RAI v. 2. ——— Creation of religious endowment—Charity—Family idols—Sale of trust property in execution—Suit by trustee to recover the property—Limitation.—The Hindu law, unlike the English law with respect to charities, makes no distinction between a religious endowment having for its object the worship of a household idol and one which is for the benefit of the general public. In execution of decree against the plaintiff, as the representative of his deceased father and brother, certain lands were sold to the first defendant. The plaintiff sued to recover them, alleging that the former owner of the lands had assigned them to his (the plaintiff's) brother and himself (the plaintiff), and their descendants by a deed of gift to perpetuate the worship of the donor's household idol. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the property. The gift was a valid one, creating a religious endowment under the Hindu law, and the plaintiff's suit was not to set aside the sale, but was one by the trustee of the endowment to recover the property to which the limitation of twelve years was applicable. RUPA JAGHNET v. KRISHNAJI GOVIND . . . I. L. R., 9 Bom., 169

3. ——— Form of creation—Perpetuity

—Trust—Void and inoperative devise.—A Hindu by will devised certain property, consisting of a family dwelling-house and land, to trustees for ever, for the residence, maintenance, and performance of the worship of certain family idols, and appointed his sons and their descendants in the strict male line to be shebais of the idols for ever, making provision for their residence in the family dwelling-house; the will also contained a clause restraining any partition, division, or alienation of the property so dedicated to the worship of the idols. The testator appointed the trustees executors of his will, and by a codicil bequeathed legacies to various members of his family. In a suit against the executors to recover a legacy so bequeathed,—Held the devise of the property to the idols was void and inoperative as being a settlement in perpetuity on the male descendants of the testator and for their use, and not a real dedication for the worship of the idols. *PROMOTHO DASS v. testator be allowed to live in the house for their lives and perform the worship of the idol, with limitation over to others on the decease of the survivors of them, and a sum of Rs 16 allowed to the survivor of the first legatee for the purposes of the idol, and after her death that the same sum be applied to the expenses of the idol. When the legatee has for a time at her own expense kept up the service, she is not entitled to have the money refunded. RODMONY DASS v. ROODH-NATH SEN . . . 1 Ind. Jur., N. E., 14

5. ————— Public charity.—
Trust—Public charitable or religious trust—Offerings made to an idol—Liability of persons in possession of an idol's property—Account.—A trust for a Hindu idol and temple is to be regarded in India as one created "for public charitable purposes" within the meaning of s. 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act X of 1877). The Hindu law recognizes not only corporate bodies with rights of property vested in the corporation apart from its individual members, but also the juridical persons or subjects called foundations. A Hindu who wishes to establish a religious or charitable institution may, according to his law, express his purpose and endow it, and the ruler will give effect to the bounty, or at least protect it. A trust is not required for this purpose as it is by English law. Those who take charge of gifts made to a religious or charitable institution—whether such gifts consist of cash, jewels, or land—incur thereby a responsibility for their due application to the purposes of the institution. They are answerable as trustees would be, even though they have not consciously accepted a trust; and a remedy may be sought against them for maladministration by a suit open to any one interested as under the Roman system in a like case by means of a popularis actio. MANOHAR GANESH TAMBekar v. LAKHMIRAM GOVINDRAM . . .

6. ————— Gift to Hindu temple.—Trust.—The defendants made a gift of land to a Hindu temple for the purpose of defraying the expenses appertaining to the idol. The temple was built and the gift made in 1870. The defendants obtained from the revenue authorities mutation of names in the idol's favour and an acknowledgment of the person whom they nominated as agent or manager. Held by the Full Bench that the gift made by the defendants constituted a trust for the purpose of the temple. Per EDGE, C.J., and TRENKLE, J.—That the defendants before the Court did not constitute themselves trustees in any sense. *RAMCHURAN DIAL v. 7. ————— Dedication to idol.—Mode of dedication.—Under Hindu law, an idol as symbolical of religious purposes is capable of being endowed with property, but no express words of gift to such idol in the shape of a trust or otherwise are required to create a valid dedication. Manohar Ganesh Tambekar v. Lakhmiram Govindram, I. L. R., 19 Bom., 247, approved. Sonatan Byrack v. Jagatsoondras Dosses, 8 Moore's I. A., 66, and

8. ————— Gift of idol and debutter land.—Private endowment.—Benefit of idol.—Shebaita.—Debutter property.—A gift of an idol and of the lands with which it is endowed (being a private endowment) made with the concurrence of the whole family to another family for the purpose of carrying on the regular worship of the idol, if made for the benefit of the idol, is not invalid, and is one binding on succeeding shebaita. KRISHNA CHUNDER GHOSH v. HARI DAS BUNDOPADHYA

9. ————— Invalid endowment.—Deeds made without intention that they should be acted upon.—Donor not divesting himself of dedicated property.—Case in which a good title was made, by her transfer of her inheritance, through the daughter and heiress of a deceased member of a joint family of brothers, under the Dayabhaga, although her father had executed deeds dedicating his share of the family property to trustees, for the worship of the family deity; this dedication having been inoperative, because it was neither his nor his brother's intention that the deeds should be acted upon, and he had never divested himself of his share. WARSON & Co. v. RAMCHUR DUTT . I. L. R., 18 Cal., 10

[I. R., 17 I. A., 110]

10. ————— Mode of dedication.—Debutter property.—Idol.—Partition subject to trust for idol.—In a suit for possession by partition, the plaintiff stated that the common ancestor of the plaintiff and the defendant and his five sons acquired certain properties; that on the death of the ancestor, his five sons separated among themselves, and each took a certain share of land for his own expenses, and the remaining portion of the lands they held in ijmales among themselves; that one of them became the manager of this portion of the lands, made the collections of the rents, and from the profits thereof paid the expenses of the rásh, dole, etc., festivals, and the worship of the deity, all of which were alleged to be patrimonial, and divided the balance. The defence substantially was that the whole of the ijmales land was the property of the idol. It was found in the lower Court that a certain portion of the land was debutter and not partible, and a decree was made for partition of the remainder. Held on appeal that, as it was not shown that this latter portion of the property had been transferred from the family and dedicated to the idol, a partition of it should be made, but subject to a trust in favour of the idol. *RAM COOMAR PAUL v. would create a moral obligation, such obligation will not be held as having any legal operation. SHAK-LOLL SEN v. HUROSOONDY GOOTRA

W. R., 1864, 107

14. ——— Treatment of, by founder and his descendants.—One test of an endowment as to whether it is bond fide or nominal is to see how the founder himself treated the property, and how the descendants have since treated it. GANGA NARAY SINGAR v. BRINDABAN CHUNDER KUR CHOWDERY

[3 W. R., 142]

15. ——— Proof of actual assignment to idol—Proceeds of land appropriated for worship.—The mere fact of the proceeds of a piece of land having been appropriated for the worship of an idol does not constitute it an endowed property, but the fact of the assignment to the idol must be specifically proved. NARAY PERSHAD MITT v. RUDUR NARAY MUGEL

2 May, 490

16. ——— Proof of expenditure for long time of proceeds of land on worship of idol—Documentary evidence.—Documentary proof is not absolutely necessary to prove an endowment. The mere fact of the proceeds of any land being used for the support of an idol may not be proof that those lands formed an endowment for the purpose; but where there is apparently good evidence, going back for more than half a century, that the land was given for the support of an idol, proof that from that time the proceeds had been so expended would be strong corroboration. MUDDUR LALL v. KOMUL BIKH

8 W. R., 43

17. ——— Use of proceeds of land for worship of idol—Evidence of dedication.—The mere fact that a portion of the profits of land in the possession of a party had been for some time used for the worship of an idol is no proof of an endowment, and cannot impose on such party the liabilities attaching to the office of a shebait. RAM PERSHAD DASS v. 18. ——— Release of land by Government on ground of its appropriation to idol—Evidence of permanent dedication.—The mere fact of land having been released by Government on the ground of its being appropriated to the services of an idol does not impose on it the character of a religious endowment so as to exempt it permanently from being attached and sold in satisfaction of decrees against a person who may hold it. NIMAYE CHURN PUTRENDUN v. JOGENDRO NATH BANERJEE

[21 W. R., 365]

III. ——— Purchase in name of idol—Alienation.—The plaintiff sued as the shebait of a certain idol to recover possession of a zamindari by setting aside an alienation thereof effected by his grandmother, on the ground that it was debutter property dedicated to the idol, and consequently inalienable. It appeared that the property in dispute was purchased by the grandfather of the plaintiff in the name of the idol, which was set up merely for his private worship in his own house without any priests to perform regularly any religious service for the public benefit of Hindus, and that the property had been dealt with all along as his own private property. Held that this was a mere nominal endowment, and consequently the alienation thereof was not invalid. Held also that a property purchased by a man in the name of his own idol, which no one except himself has the power or right to worship, is not the property of the idol, but the property of the person who purchased it. BRJOSCONDERY DERRA v. LUCHMEE KONWAR

20. ——— Land dedicated to idol—Alienation of land and idol—Suit for recovery of the land.—Plaintiff sued to recover certain land, alleged to be debutter and dedicated to a family idol which had been alienated together with the idol by his father and purchased by the defendant. He did not sue to recover the idol. Held that the plaintiff could not recover the land without the idol and replace the latter, treating it as lost or destroyed, by a new one, inasmuch as, according to Hindu law, when an idol has once been consecrated by appropriate ceremonies, the deity of which the idol is the visible image resides in it, and not in any substituted image. DOORGA PERSHAD DASS v. SHRO PRSHAD PANDAN

21. ——— Land enjoyed as private property, though attached to karnam—Suit to recover after ejectment.—Plaintiff brought a suit to recover land which had been enjoyed by her husband, the karnam of a village, but which on his death had been given to the defendant, with the office of karnam. The land had been originally attached to the office, but the plaintiff's husband for a long time before his death was enjoying the land as his private property. Held that the miras of the land continued to be attached to the office, notwithstanding that it may have been for some time enjoyed as private property; that the property, being annexed to the office, was indivisible, and as the Collector, in ejecting the plaintiff, appropriated the land to the office by putting it in the possession of the karnam whom he appointed in place of the plaintiff's husband, the plaintiff had no right to recover. SEKHAIYA v. GAUR-AMMA 4 Mad., 336

3. NON-PERFORMANCE OF SERVICES.

22. ———— Non-performance of conditions of trust—Effect of, on trust.—If a trust or endowment be created bona fide, the mere fact that the parties in possession of the trust or endowed property do not carry out the conditions of the trust does not invalidate the transactions. KARHESHUREN DASSEN v. KRISHNAKAMINER DASSEN 2 Hay, 557

23. ———— Failure to perform services of idol—Result of refusal to perform—Suit for khas possession.—A party holding land assigned for the support of an idol subject to the performance of the ceremonies of worship of the idol, who fails to perform the required service, may be compelled to do so, and on refusal may be removed; but such refusal would not enable a party claiming the land under a fresh assignment from a descendant of the original grantor to recover possession by a suit. *MORRIS CHUNDRA CHUCKERBUTTY v. 4. DEALING WITH, AND MANAGEMENT OF, ENDOWMENT.

25. ———— Principles to be observed in dealing with endowments—Mad. Reg. VII of 1817.—The important principle to be observed by the Courts in dealing with the constitution and rules of religious brotherhoods attached to Hindu temples is to ascertain, if possible, the special laws and usages governing the particular community whose affairs have become the subject of litigation and to be guided by them. The superintending authority over religious endowments exercised by the old rulers of the country passed to the British Government, and Madras Regulation VII of 1817 merely defined the manner in which that power was to be thenceforth exercised. *MUTTU RAMALINGA SETUPATI v. 27. ———— Power of control of odhikaree by general body of bhukuts—Power of odhikaree to remove bhukuts.—In a suit by the bhukuts of the Komolabari Shaster in Assam for confirmation of their rights in that endowment and restoration of possession thereof, it was held that the plaintiffs had failed to make out their title; that by the original grant of Rajah Luckee Singh, inscribed on a copper plate, the management of the debutter property was entrusted to the odhikaree, over whom the shormoho or general body of bhukuts have no control, either in respect to his duties as the religious head of the Komolabari Shaster or in the management of its revenues. Held that the odhikaree could not turn the bhukuts out of the shaster without just cause. DOOTERAM SURMA DOORER v. LUCKEE KANT GOSSAMER 12 W. R., 425

28. ———— Proprietorship of endowed property—Religious communities at Benares and Tirpungal, Status of.—The mohunt of the muth at Tirpungal, zillah Tanjore, in the Madras Presidency, sued the mohunt of the muth at Benares in the Civil Court of Zillah Benares for the right to manage as proprietor the muth and chutter affairs at Benares and the temple of Sri Kedareswar, and to recover property belonging thereto, and to have an account of receipts and disbursements relative to the same; such relief being claimed by virtue of his proprietary right as mohunt and guddesashin of the head-quarters muth at Tirpungal under whose jurisdiction and power the chutter institution at Benares had continued from time immemorial. The defendant denied the plaintiff's claim to the immoveable property and endowment which he represented as acquired by his ancestors, the mohunt guddesashins at Benares and himself. He denied that he was an agent, and claimed to be the real proprietor in possession and occupation by right of succession to his ancestors. The first Court decreed the plaintiff's claim. The High Court modified the decree, giving the plaintiff possession of certain chutters and gardens built or purchased out of funds remitted from Madras, and declaring him entitled to an account of a sum admitted to have been remitted from Tirpungal, but holding that he had failed to make out possession of the muth, temple, or other property. Held that the original foundation having been admittedly at Benares, which is the holy place, and the object having been to afford to persons, either resident in the south of India or making pilgrimage to Benares, facilities for worship and religious duties there, raised a presumption that the establishment at Tirpungal was subordinate to that at Benares. And that it was not shown that any change had been effected in the original constitution of the community. Held that the nature of the relation between the muths at Tirpungal and Benares was that the former fed the establishment at the latter, the object of which was to afford facilities to pilgrims and others wishing to pay their devotions at Benares. The result was that the establishment at Tirpungal collected alms and remitted them to Benares, producing complicated exchange transactions between the two establishments. Held that the plaintiff had failed to establish either that he was the proprietor of the property at Benares or that the defendant was his mere agent, and that the High Court was right in limiting the relief to what was included in the decrees. KASHI BASHI RAMLING SWAMEE v. CHILUMBERNATH KOOMAR SWAMEE 20 W. R., P. C., 217

29. ——— Mode of enjoyment of endowed property—Decree or agreement made to bind successive owners.—A Court has no power to bind in perpetuity all the successive owners of an endowment as to the mode in which their property should be managed; and the shebait of a debutter endowment may make such arrangement for its management as is consistent with their duties, but they cannot make it binding for ever upon all their successors. BUNWARIE CHAND THAKOOR v. MUDDEN MOHUN CHUTTARAJ 21 W. R., 41

30. ——— Repairs of temple—Katlais or distinct endowments—Liability for repairs—Proof of custom in absence of endowment-deeds.—The panchayatdars or managers of a temple, being directed by a Magistrate to repair the gateway of a store-house within the temple precincts and under their immediate control, spent Rs10-8 in so doing from the funds of a katlai or endowment of which they were managers. They then sued the trustees of two other katlais for recovery of the said sum on the ground that, by the usage of the temple, the cost of repairs was payable from the defendant's income, and asked for a declaration that the duty of executing repairs fell upon the defendants' katlais. Held that, in the absence of any endowment or trust-deed regarding the katlais, the decision must be found in the usage of the temple, upon proof of which judgment was given for the plaintiffs, and a declaration added to the effect that the defendants were liable for repairs to the temple so far as the surplus funds of their katlais should permit. VITHILINGA PANDARA SANNADHI v. 5. SUCCESSION IN MANAGEMENT.

31. ——— Appointment of shebait—Power of owner to appoint.—The owner of an idol is entitled to appoint anybody he likes to perform its poojah; the mere fact of a party and his ancestors having done so for a long period creates no right in his favour. INDUREET KOOR v. CHUNDERMUN MISSE 16 W. R., 90

32. ——— Succession to manager-ship—Devolution of property of idol on death of mohunt.—The general principle regulating the devolution of property belonging to a muth, on the death of the mohunt, is that a virtuous pupil takes the property. In some instances the mohuntship descends to a personal heir, and in others to a successor appointed by the existing mohunt; but the ordinary rule is that muths of the same sect in a district, or

34. ——— Trustee with power of appointment—Failure to appoint.—A, a Hindu, by a deed of wukfnama (deed of endowment), after reciting that he had "erected and prepared a thakurbari (temple) and the image of thakur (idol), and also a sadavart (almshouse), and had in way of wukf (endowed property) dedicated certain property for the performance of the pujah (worship) of the said thakur and repairing of the house, flower garden, and thakurbari, and appointed his sister (B) the manager and mutwali (trustee) of the same, authorized B to spend the profits in the performance of the pujah, etc. As for the future, she (B) should appoint such person to be the manager and mutwali as may be found by her to be fit, etc., and in like manner all successive mutwails should have the right of appointing successive mutwails. To these his heirs should not have right to prefer any claim, etc." B died without having appointed any mutwali (trustee) to succeed her in the management of the trust. In a suit by the heir of B to obtain possession of the property covered by the deed against the heirs of A, —Held that the managerhip, on failure of appointment of a trustee, reverted to the heirs of the person who endowed the property. JAI BAHAI KUNWAR v. 35. ——— Custom or practice of sect.—When the property is of the nature of an endowment, a claim to succeed under the ordinary Hindu law of inheritance was not maintainable. Plaintiff might have sued to get the management of the property in preference to the defendant, a widow, by the custom or practice of the sect. GOSSAEN SEEN CHOUNDAWALEE BAHOOJEE v. J, having died in 1824, was succeeded by his son T without any opposition from the two other branches. T was temporarily displaced from the office by G, who represented the two other branches, but recovered it in 1850. In an action brought by the plaintiff as representative of G in 1878 to establish his claim to the office held by T's sons, it was contended on behalf of plaintiff, in answer to defendant's plea of limitation, that in the absence of evidence of the circumstances under which T succeeded to the patilship, T must be presumed to have been nominated to that office by all the members of the watandar family jointly, or with their assent sought and granted, and was consequently the representative of all of them. Held that the succession of a son to his father in an hereditary office is primarily to be referred to a right based on the relation subsisting between them just as would be the son's succession to his father's property. GIRIAPA v. JAKANA

37. ———— Temple—Hereditary trustee—Title—Proof—Mad. Reg. VII of 1817.—The mere succession of a son to a father in a trusteeship of a temple does not create an hereditary right. Quere—Whether, as long as Regulation VII of 1817 was in force, it was competent to Government absolutely to divest itself of the obligations imposed on it by that Regulation. *Venkatesa Nayudu v. 38. ———— Succession to office and property of deceased mohunt—Custom of institution.—In determining the right of succession to the property left by the deceased head of a religious institution, the only law to be observed is to be found in custom and practice, which must be proved by evidence. On the death of a mohunt, the right to succeed to his landed and other property was contested between two goshains. Held that the claimant, in order to succeed, must prove the custom of the math entitling him to recover the office and the property appertaining to it. The evidence showed the custom to be that the title to succeed to the office and property was dependent on the successor's having been the chela approved and nominated as such by the late mohunt, and also after the death of the latter installed or confirmed as mohunt by the other goshains of the sect. Held that a claimant who failed to prove his installation or confirmation was not entitled to a decree for the office and property against a person alleging himself to have been a chela who, whether with or without title, was in possession. *GRNDA PURI v. The claim extended also to religious establishments at Benares and elsewhere connected with the muth. The muth was founded by a member of the adhinam. Many previous heads of the muth had agreed to be "slaves" of the head of the adhinam, but for over 60 years the head of the adhinam had exercised no management over the endowments belonging to the math; and in a suit (compromised) of the year 1874 the present pretensions of the head of the adhinam had been denied in toto. The defendant had succeeded in 1880 to the management of the muth under the will of his predecessor, dated the same year, and was not a disciple of the adhinam. Held (1) that the muth was affiliated to the adhinam, but the head of the adhinam is not entitled to appoint to the office of head of the math and was not entitled to an order for delivery of the property of the math to himself or to his appointee; (2) that on the evidence as to the usage in the establishments in question, the head of the math was entitled to appoint his successor, but his election was limited to members of the adhinam; and the head of the adhinam was entitled to enforce this rule, though he was bound to invest a disciple properly nominated by the head of the math; (3) that the defendant not being a disciple of the adhinam, his appointment was invalid, and the head of the adhinam was entitled to see that a competent member of the adhinam was appointed in his stead. GIYANA SAMBANDHA PADAMA SAMWADHI v. KANDASAMI TAMBIAN

40. ———— Construction of will—Right of shebaitship of a family deb-shaba under a will.—A testator, who died leaving widows and a daughter and also three surviving brothers, bequeathed all the residue, after certain legacies, of his acquired estate to maintain the worship of a family deity, appointing his three brothers and his eldest widow to be shebait, and providing that "the family of us five brothers shall be supported from the proceeds (offerings to the deity)." One or other of the brothers then for some years managed the estate as shebait, and the survivor of them was succeeded by his son, one of the defendants in the present suit, which was brought by the testator's only daughter as heiress to his estate, claiming that the Court should determine "those provisions which were valid and lawful, and those which were invalid and illegal." She claimed possession and an account, and also to be the shebait. Held that the plaintiff's claim to a preferential title to this office depended on a sentence in the will constituting, as construed by the Courts below, to be shebait the senior in age of the heirs of the original shebait, the defendant now holding the office coming within this provision according to the judgments of both Courts. As to this, no reason had been shown in appeal for a different conclusion. KAMINI DEBI v. ASUTOSH MUKHERJI. ASUTOSH MUKHERJI v. KAMINI DEBI

to be vested in the heir or heirs of the founder, in default of evidence that he has disposed of it otherwise, provided that there has not been some usage, course of dealing, or circumstance, showing a different mode of devolution. Pest Koonwar v. Chatter Dharee Singh, 18 W. R., 296, referred to. It having been established that a particular worship had been founded by the plaintiff's grandfather, it followed that the plaintiff was by inheritance the shebait of that worship, there being no proof of any usage at variance with this presumption, but the custom appearing to be in accordance with it. Held that the plaintiff, as such representative of the founder, was entitled, in preference to a collaterally-descended member of the founder's family, to claim the shebaitship. Also that the plaintiff was entitled, in that character, to the possession of a portrait which had been by the same founder dedicated to this worship. But that he had no right to a temple in which the portrait was kept, this temple having been given by one of the worshippers ("for the location of the Sri Sri Iswar Jios") with the condition annexed that the defendant should be shebait. The plaintiff accordingly could not claim possession of this temple, as it could only have been accepted as a gift upon the donor's terms; and this condition prevailed notwithstanding that the temple had been in part paid for by subscription among the worshippers; there being no evidence that the latter did not know of it, or had paid their money with any reference to the question who was to be shebait. *GOSSAMI SRI GRIDHARINI v. 42. ———— Nomination by a pandaram under a decree—Revocation of such nomination by the pandaram's successor.—The pandaram of a muth, being empowered under a decree to nominate a person to be the head of a subordinate muth subject to the approval of the subordinate Court, made a nomination and died before the subordinate Court had come to a determination as to the fitness of his nominee. His successor in office was brought on to the record and revoked his nomination, and made a fresh nomination. The subordinate Court treated the fresh nomination as a nullity and made an order confirming the first. The pandaram appealed against this order. Held that the nomination first made was revocable for good cause, and that the fitness of the person nominated by the appellant should be investigated by the Subordinate Judge. *GHANASAMBANDA v. The plaintiff alleged that the immemorial custom with reference to the succession to the office of jheer was that the jheer for the time being nominated

his successor, and that, failing such nomination, the disciples assembled at the place where he died elected his successor, and that the person so nominated became jheer by virtue of such nomination alone. The plaintiff's case was that he was nominated by the late jheer, although the nomination was not concurred in by the disciples, and that the late jheer had initiated him and directed him to become a sannyasi a day or two after his initiation, and that he was accordingly entitled to the rights and privileges of jheer. The plaintiff obtained a decree, which was, however, made contingent upon his assuming the character of a sannyasi within the period of four months. The defendant preferred an appeal against this decree, and the plaintiff preferred an appeal praying for the enlargement of the period fixed, within which he was to become a sannyasi pending the disposal of the appeal preferred by the defendant. On the plaintiff's appeal,—Held the Court had power to extend the time as prayed. On the defendant's appeal,—Held (1), on its appearing that the plaintiff did not repeat the presha mantram, that his upadesam was insufficient; (2) that the plaintiff's right, if any, to the status of jheer ceased on his omission to become a sannyasi soon after the initiation alleged; (3) on the evidence that no similar case of succession had taken place in the history of the institution, that the plaintiff had established merely an imperfect nomination which could not be upheld on the principles deducible from the known cases of succession. *BANGACHARIAN v. 44. ———— Succession to management of muth—Want of asceticism of paradesi—Removal of paradesi—Form of decrees.—The plaintiff, the zamindar of Sivagunga, sued in a subordinate Court to remove the defendant from the office of head of a muth. The defendant was a married man living with his wives and children, whom he maintained with the produce of the property of the muth, and it appeared that he had failed to perform the ceremonies of the institution. The muth in question came into existence under a deed of endowment or "charity grant," whereby the first zamindar of Sivagunga granted land to his guru for the erection and maintenance of a muth and the performance of certain religious exercises in perpetuity, and provided that the head of the muth should be of the line of disciples of the original grantee whose spiritual family he desired to perpetuate. In 1867 a predecessor in title of the plaintiff had sued unsuccessfully to recover certain property of the muth from the defendant, alleging another cause of action than his status as a married man and his misappropriation of the muth property; and in that suit it was established that the head of the muth for the time being had the right to appoint his successor, and that such appointment was not subject to confirmation by the zamindar. It appeared that the trusts of the muth had been violated and the income misapplied, and that there was no qualified disciples in whom the right of succession had vested, and that the members of the plaintiff's family were the only persons interested in the appointment. Held that the proper decree was (1) to declare the plaintiff's right to appoint a qualified person with the concurrence of the rest of his family; (2) to direct him to do so within a given time, failing which the suit should stand dismissed with costs. If such appointment was made, notice should be given to the other members of the plaintiff's family before it was confirmed; if such appointment were confirmed, the property should be directed to be delivered to the person appointed to be administered in accordance with the trusts and usage of the muth. Simile—That the paradesi or head of the muth might be a married man, provided he had been duly initiated. SATHAPPATAY v. 45. ————— Succession to the office of dharmakarta—Act XX of 1863, s. 14—Religious endowments—Custom and usage.—On a question of the right of succession to the office of dharmakarta of a devasthanam or temple at Ramewaram in Madura (and in such cases the only law applicable is the custom and practice, which are to be proved by evidence), both the Courts below found that, according to the established usage, the succession was provided for by each successive dharmakarta initiating a pandaram, and, whilst in office, appointing him as his successor. It followed that the appointment of a dharmakarta by one who had already ceased to hold the office (having been removed under Act XX of 1863, s. 14) was not in accordance with usage, and was therefore invalid. The person whom the displaced dharmakarta had attempted to appoint was head of the muth from which preceding dharmakartas, as it appeared, had been taken. Besides the above cause of invalidity in the appointment in question, the evidence supported the finding that the displaced dharmakarta made his attempt to appoint the head of the muth to succeed him in office in furtherance of his own interests, and did not bona fide exercise his powers, if any. This finding invalidated the whole appointment and applied to the headship of the muth as well as to the office of dharmakarta. RAMALINGAM PILLAI v. VITHILINGAM PILLAI. I. L. R., 18 Mad., 490 [I. It is necessary for the person claiming a right to succeed as mohant to establish that right by satisfactory evidence; he cannot derive any advantage from the weakness of his opponent's title. Per MAHMOOD, J.—It was necessary for the plaintiff in this case to prove that he was "nihang," as distinguished from "grihast," which he failed to do.

47. ————— Succession as mohant of a muth at Puri—Custom—Right of a chela—Alleged disqualification of mohant to take a chela by reason of being a leper.—Two rival claimants contested the right to succeed to the office of mohant of a mourai muth under a customary rule of succession. Both the Courts below found that the mohant for the time being had power to appoint his successor from among his chelas; that, in the absence of appointment, a chela, or, if there should be more than one, the eldest chela, would succeed; and that, should there be no chela, then a gurubhai or chela of the same guru with the deceased mohant would succeed. The plaintiff's case was that he had been duly taken as a chela and appointed by the last mohant, whose title was not disputed. The defendant, who was in possession, denied that the plaintiff had ever been such a chela, alleging that, even if the last mohant had attempted to take him as a chela, this act would have been invalid by reason of that mohant having been a leper. The defendant's title was that he had been taken as a chela by the mohant who had preceded the last, and had been in a position to dispute the right of succession, but had yielded it when the last mohant had taken office. He put forward an alleged will of the latter, which stated that he was to succeed, and relied on his possession approved by other mohants. Held that only a leprosy of virulent form could have disqualified the last mohant. As to it, there was no medical evidence; but on the facts the conclusion was that there had been no such disqualification. The statements in the alleged will were not true, and it was ineffectual to alter the title, whether the last mohant had executed it or not, having no testamentary effect; also what had been done after the death of the last mohant could not deprive the plaintiff or entitle the defendant, there being no custom to authorize the choice of a mohant in that way. BHAGABAI RAMANUJ DAS v. Subsequently, his senior widow, Her Highness Kamakshi Bayi Saheba, applied that they should be handed over to her as the head of the family for the time being; the Government in 1863 made an order saying, "it is desirable that the connection of Government with the pagodas should cease; they will accordingly be handed over to Her Highness Kamakshi Bayi Saheba." The pagodas and their endowments were handed over in pursuance of that order, and were held by the senior widow till her death in 1893. On her death, Government ordered that they should be placed under the Devasthanam Committee of the circles in which they were situated. The senior surviving widow now claimed to be entitled to possession and the right of management by succession, and sued accordingly. Held that Government intended to make an absolute transfer in 1863 without any reservation of a reversionary right to make a new appointment, and that, whether Her Highness Kamakshi Bayi Saheba took the trust property for a widow's estate or, as stridhanam, the plaintiff was entitled to succeed. KALANA SUNDARAM AYYAR v. On behalf of the defendant it was contended that the right of succession to a shebaitship was not governed by the ordinary rules of inheritance, and that the plaintiff had no title thereto. Held that a Hindu widow could not succeed to a shebaitship as heir to her husband without proof of special custom. In this case there was no sufficient proof of such custom. JANOKI DASSA v. GOPAUL ACHARJEA . . . I. L. R., 9 Cal., 365

Held, on appeal to the Privy Council, that where, owing to the absence of documentary or other direct evidence, it does not appear what rule of succession has been laid down by the endower, it must be proved by evidence what is the usage. In the present instance the usage did not support the claim; and, upon the evidence, the claimant, who was out of possession, failed to make a title. JANOKI DEVI v. GOPAL ACHARJIA GOSWAMI [I. 55. ————— Mohunt—Appointment of successors—Conditional appointment invalid.—A mohunt by his will appointed L, his spiritual brother, to be his successor, and after making such appointment his will thus continued: "Amongst all my disciples I think G is a little intelligent and clever, but of younger age than befits a mohunt. Should he receive instruction and learn the duties of mohunt under your guidance, he might probably be competent. Wherefore I direct that you will keep G with you, and initiate him well in the duties of a mohunt, and when you feel yourself incapable of conducting the business as above, you can appoint G as mohunt in your place, and not otherwise." Held by the High Court, first, that a mohunt may appoint a spiritual brother, and, L being a spiritual brother, the appointment was valid, and he was entitled to succeed upon the testator's death. Secondly, that the direction for appointing G did not of itself vest the mohuntship in G, but that the intention of the testator was that L should not appoint him if he should turn out to be in his opinion incompetent. Thirdly, that the testator had no power to attach any such conditions to the interest his appointee should enjoy in the mohunt. For a person having a fee simple in an estate, with the power of appointing to the succession, has no right to annex to it conditions which the person who gave him the power of appointment never gave the power to annex. In the absence of such power,

therefore, a mohunt who once nominates his successor has no right to give directions to his successor, when his turn to nominate comes, as to whom he should nominate. Fourthly, that the testator having no power to give any directions as to the person who should be L's successor, L was entitled, after he had succeeded to the guddi, to appoint as his successor a person other than G. Fifthly, that even if by custom a power to appoint two mohunts in succession had been established, still under the words of the will a discretion would have been left to L in the choice of his successor, and he would not have been bound to appoint G. It seems that in a suit for the recovery of an elective mohuntship to which the plaintiff claims to be mohunt, but does not show that he was elected, but merely that the defendant was not elected or was irregularly elected, the Court ought to dismiss the suit, and has no jurisdiction to direct a new election. Held by the Privy Council on appeal that the will did not give G an absolute, positive, unqualified right at any time to the mohuntship, even on the incapacity of L to perform the duties of mohunt; that until L became incapable, no trust or duty was created; that even when he became incapable, it was no more than a gift in the nature of a precatory trust. Held also on the evidence that G had failed to establish his own title to be mohunt, and that the suit was so framed that in it he could not recover the mohuntship on the mere infirmity of defendant's title. The only law as to mohunts and their offices is to be found in custom and practice which is to be proved by evidence. There cannot be two existing mohunts, and the office cannot be held jointly. GREENHARE Doss v. NUNDOKISHORE Doss Marsh, 578: 2 Hay, 688

57. ———— Succession to maurusi mohant—Appointment of mohant—Ceremonies—Revocation of nomination of chela—Disqualification of mohant.—In the cases of a maurusi muth, the investiture by the leading neighbouring mohunts, at the Bandhara ceremony, of one who cannot prove that he was actually appointed by the last mohunt, is not sufficient, in the absence of proof that he has a right to be so appointed as being senior chela of the last mohant, to entitle him to succeed to the guddi. The succession to muths or religious endowments must be regulated in each case by the nature of the endowment and the rule of succession prescribed by the founder of the institution, and if this rule cannot be discovered from the original deed of gift or other documentary evidence, it must be proved in each case by showing what the usage has been on the occasion of each succession. A mohunt of a maurusi muth, by a deed of gift in 1849, made over all the property of the muth to his senior chela and invested him with the shudder of mohanti; but subsequently a dispute having arisen on account of the immoral life led by the appointee, a compromise was effected, by which the former mohant was permitted to take back the muth and the property belonging to it, the other being allowed merely to retain possession of a subordinate muth. In 1878 the mohant died, leaving a will, dated 6th May 1878, by which he appointed the defendant his successor. The original appointee thereupon obtained his own confirmation as mohant at a Bandhara ceremony by the neighbouring mohant, and brought a suit against the defendant, who was in possession for recovery of possession of the muth and the properties belonging thereto, relying on the deed of gift of 1849. Held that, the muth being maurusi, the plaintiff was not entitled to possession, there being no reason why the deed of gift should not be considered to have been cancelled by the compromise or by the will. Questions as to whether a claimant to a muth is a Sunjogi, or whether from his conduct and mode of life he is disqualified for the office, may be determined by a Civil Court. SITAPERSHAD Doss v. He resided at Nathdwar within the territories of the Rana of Udepur in Mewar. Part of the dedicated property was at Poona. The first four defendants managed this portion of the property for the plaintiff. They collected the rents and transmitted them to him from time to time. In 1876 the Rana deposed the plaintiff for alleged misconduct, deported him from his territories, and proclaimed the plaintiff's son (defendant No. 5) as Tekait Maharaj. The defendant having refused to pay over the rents and to deliver the Poona property to the plaintiff, the plaintiff brought the present suit to recover possession. The plaintiff's son was made a co-defendant on his own application. The defendants denied the plaintiff's right to the property on the ground that he had been deposed and banished by the Rana, and the fifth defendant (the plaintiff's son) claimed to be

Tekait Maharaj, and as such to be entitled to all the devasthan property. The lower Court made a decree in favour of the plaintiff. On appeal by the defendants to the High Court, —Held that the plaintiff was entitled to the property in dispute. The order of the Rana could not be regarded as a foreign judgment between the parties. That order, whatever its effect might be within the territories of the Rana, could not affect the property situated in Poona beyond his jurisdiction. It had descended to the plaintiff on the death of his father in virtue of the custom of primogeniture obtaining in his family. Whether he took it as owner or as trustee for the idol and shrine was immaterial, for in either case he had a right to possession. If he took it as owner, he had not in law lost his right as such in consequence of the Rana's act. 61. — Relation between the founder's representatives and the mookunt—Agreement by the mookunt on his appointment—Grounds of dismissal.—In the absence of a deed of endowment, the obligations of the head of a muth to the representative of the founder can only be deduced from the usage of the institution. In a suit by the representative of the founder to remove the defendant from the headship of a muth, it appeared that the usage was for the head of the institution for the time being to nominate his successor, and for the representative of the founder to sanction the nomination and invest the nominee with a sadi on his installation, and that the defendant had asked the plaintiff to appoint him and had undertaken on his appointment to furnish to him accounts of the income and expenditure of the muth. Held that the plaintiff was not entitled to remove the defendant from office on the ground of his refusal to furnish accounts. GAJAPATI v. trustees and their heirs, etc., the right to reside for life in the first storey of the said house free of rent. The shrine of Shri Nathji is situate at Nathdwara in the territory of His Highness the Maharaja of Oodeypore. It is held in great veneration by the Vaishnava sect of Hindus, and is extremely wealthy. The plaintiff held the position of Maharaja of Nathdwara (Tikait Maharaja) up to the year 1876, and as such sat on the gadi and managed the property of the said shrine. In that year, however, he was deposed from his position by the principal authorities of Oodeypore and deported from Nathdwara, and his son, the second defendant, was raised to the gadi in his place. Since that time the plaintiff had never been permitted to go back, nor had he had anything to do with the shrine. The second defendant (his son) had since his elevation performed the worship and managed the property belonging to the shrine. The plaintiff, however, claimed in this suit to be still the legal owner and representative of the shrine, and as such entitled to the house in question and to the rents and profits thereof since the death of C. The first defendant was one of the trustees named in the will of C, to whom the house was bequeathed in trust. The plaintiff in his plaint also contended that the clause in C's will, giving the said trustees a right to reside in the house free of rent, was ultra vires of the power of appointment given to her by the will of her husband. The defendants denied that since his deposition the plaintiff was the legal owner and representative of the shrine of Shri Nathji. They contended that, having been deposed and deported from Nathdwara, he could no longer apply the rents to the support of the shrine, and that, if the house were given to him, the trusts of C's will would be defeated. They contended that the second defendant, in virtue of his position, was entitled to receive the rents, and that this suit should be dismissed. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to the said house. The house was validly bequeathed to the gadi. At the date of the bequest the plaintiff was de facto as well as de jure in possession of the shrine and of its property. His deposition from the gadi was an act of a foreign State, and did not affect his right to property in Bombay. If he was regarded as owner of that property, he had not lost his right as such to the said property in consequence of his deposition, and if he was merely a trustee, he had not been removed from his office by any competent tribunal. Held also that under the will of C the first defendant was entitled to reside rent free in the first storey of the house in question during his lifetime. GOSWAMI SHRI GIRDHARJI v. and as such was manager of the property of the shrine. This shrine is held in great veneration by the Vaishnava sect of Hindus, and large bequests and offerings of money, land, etc., are made to it by members of that sect. To facilitate the collection of such offerings and the employment of the funds belonging to the shrine, firms are established in various parts of India, including Bombay. The firm in Bombay was carried on under the name of N P, and the house in which it was carried on was built with moneys belonging to the shrine. On the 8th May 1876, by order of the Political Agent of Meywar and the Maharana of Oodeypore, he was deposed from that office for alleged misconduct and deported from Nathdwara. In his place his son, the plaintiff, was placed on the gadi as high priest. In 1878 the plaintiff brought this suit praying for a declaration that as high priest of the shrine he was entitled to the property in Bombay belonging thereto, and for delivery of the same to him, and for an injunction against the defendant, and for a receiver, etc. He obtained a rule nisi calling on the defendant to show cause why he should not be restrained from receiving or dealing with the moneys of the said firm of N P and from tampering with the books, etc. Held, discharging the rule, that the plaintiff had shown no title to the property in question. The defendant was in possession, and had been for many years in possession, of the property. His deposition by a foreign power and the election of the plaintiff to the gadi in the place of the defendant did not transfer the title to property in Bombay from the defendant to the plaintiff. As an act of State, it could not be made the basis of an action, and it could not be regarded as a foreign judgment. *GOSWAMI SHRI GOVARDHANLALJI GIRDHARLALJI v. 7. TRANSFER OF RIGHT OF WORSHIP.

64. ——— Right of priest performing sradh.—The Hindu law does not declare that the priest who performs the sradh, however temporary his incumbency may be, is entitled to the land endowed in consideration of the continuous performance of the recurring ceremonies of sradh and other rites for the spiritual benefit of the donor. *RAM CHUNDER CHUCKERBUTTY v. 65. ——— Transfer of right of worship to stranger.—Duration of assignment.—The right of worship of an idol, being the joint property of the members of the family of the endower, cannot be transferred to a third party, a stranger to the family, so as to endure beyond the life of the assignor. *UKOOR DASS v. the power of transferring his trust to any other person. And where a trustee is empowered to appoint another trustee to act for him, he cannot transfer the right of exercising that power to another or others. The mode in which a suit for the removal or appointment of a manager to an endowment not coming within Act XX of 1863 should be brought stated. KALI CHURAN GIRI v. GOLABI, 2 C. L. 67. ——— Right to perform service of idol.—Sale in execution of decree.—A judgment-debtor's right as shebait to perform the service of an idol cannot be sold in execution of a decree, nor can his right to the surplus profits of the sheba be sold so long as that right is unascertained and uncertain. *JUGGUR NATH ROY CHOWDHRY v. 70. ——— Alienation of right to officiate in temple.—Sale in execution of decree.—The right of managing a temple which is a religious endowment, of officiating at the worship conducted in it, and of receiving the offerings at the shrine, cannot, in default of proof to the contrary, pass outside the family of the trustee, until absolute failure of succession in his family, and such rights are therefore not saleable in execution of decree. The alienation, therefore, by a divided member of a Hindu family to his sister's son, of the right of worshipping a goddess and receiving a share of the offerings was upheld. *MANCHARAM v. [I. L. R., 4 Mad., 391]

74. ————— Transfer of religious office—Transferee not solely entitled in succession to transferor.—In a suit against the mooktessers or trustees of a temple, the plaintiff sought a declaration of his right to perform the puja in the temple, and an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with the exercise of such right. It appeared that the office of pujari was hereditary in the plaintiff's family; that it had been held by the plaintiff's undivided uncle (deceased); that he transferred it in 1880 to the plaintiff's father (deceased), in succession to whom the plaintiff now claimed it. The High Court called for a finding as to whether the plaintiff's father was the sole heir next in succession to his transferor, and it was found that he had three brothers. Held that the transfer of the office to the plaintiff's father was invalid, and the suit should be dismissed. NARAYANA v. RANGA . I. L. R., 15 Mad., 189

75. ————— Right of suit—Suit to set aside sale in execution of decree of lands belonging to temple.—A hereditary dharmakarta of a temple, who had assigned his office to a zamindar and consented to a decree being passed on the footing of such assignment, is competent nevertheless to bring a suit to set aside a Court sale of temple lands, treating such assignment as a nullity. SUBBARAYUDU v. KOTAYYA . I. L. R., 15 Mad., 389

76. ————— Res extra commercium—Custom as to assignability.—The plaintiff sued for a declaration of his title as purchaser of a mirasid office in a temple to which were attached certain duties to be performed as part of a religious ceremony, and for a sum of money representing the emoluments of the office. The first defendant was the plaintiff's vendor, the second defendant claimed title to the office by purchase, the other defendants were the trustees of the temple, and they did not appear on appeal. The Court of first instance passed a decree as prayed, which was reversed on an appeal preferred by the second defendant alone. On second appeal, Held that defendant No. 2 was not entitled to a decree on the sole ground that the office was res extra commercium. Per PARKER, J.—Had the trustees of the temple appeared in the Court of first appeal and raised the question of the inalienability of the office, it would have been necessary for the Court to have determined the question whether by the custom of the particular institution such alienations were valid. RANGASAMI v. RANGA . I. L. R., 16 Mad., 146

77. ————— Gift of vritti (or religious office)—Validity of such gift—Compulsory alienation of vritti—Sale in execution—Private alienation.—A vritti cannot be sold in execution of a decree. Such a compulsory alienation is not only opposed to the Hindu law and public policy, but is also against the provisions of s. 266 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882). But private alienations are not absolutely prohibited. No general rule can be pleaded in such matters. The rules of succession depend upon each particular foundation or office, and in respect of it custom and practice must govern and prevail over the text law which prohibits both partition and alienation. RAJARAM v. GANESH . I. L. R., 23 Bom., 131

78. ————— Inalienability of priestly office and turn of worship of idol—Right of absest—Estoppel.—A priestly office with emoluments attached to it is inalienable, and it would be contrary to public policy to allow offices like this to be transferred either by private sale or by sale in execution of a decree. *Mancharam v. 8. ALIENATION OF ENDOWED PROPERTY.

79. ————— Religious offices and temple property, Transfer and alienation of—Custom.—According to Hindu text-writers as regards public endowments, religious offices are naturally indivisible, though modern custom has sanctioned a departure in respect of allowing the parties entitled to share to officiate by turns, and of allowing alienation within certain restrictions. TRINBAK RAMKRISHNA RAMADE v. LAKSHMAN RAMKRISHNA RAMADE . I. L. R., 20 Bom., 495

80. ————— Power of alienation—Sale for benefit of property—Duty of purchasers.—The case of a person alienating property which he holds as absest of an idol is analogous to that of a Hindu widow alienating ancestral property, and the question as regards the power of a absest to grant a patni of a debutter land is whether, looking to all the circumstances of the case, the alienation was a prudent and wise act in respect of the purposes for which he was absest, and in estimating the validity of a purchase of the patni rights, it ought to be considered whether the purchasers satisfied themselves as far as they could that there was a fair and sufficient ground of necessity for the alienation. JUGGESHUR BUTTOYAL v. RODRO NARAIN ROY. 12 W. R., 269

81. ———— Power of mohunt to alienate.—Right of successor against purchaser from mohunt.—A mohunt in charge of an endowment with only a life-interest in the property cannot create an interest superior to his own, or, except under the most extraordinary pressure and for the distinct benefit of the endowment, bind his successors in office. If a purchaser from such mohunt retained possession after the mohunt's death, the successor to the guddi would have a cause of action against him from the date of the election; and no length of possession during the vendor's lifetime would give the purchaser a valid title as against the present mohunt. BURN SUBROOP DASS v. KHASHEE JHA

82. ———— Position of shebait.—A shebait is in the position of trustee for the founder, and cannot create permanent encumbrances to the injury of the endowed property. No prescription derived from the trustee can in such cases run against the heirs and representatives of the founder. PROSUNNO MOYEE DOSSEN v. KOONJO BEHAREE CROWDERY

83. ———— Powers of shebait.—Where the father of the plaintiffs, who was a shebait of certain debutter property, granted a mourasi mokurari lease of a portion of that property to his co-shebait, the grandfather of the defendants, such lease being granted without any legal necessity, Held that such lease was wholly void. PROSUNNO KUMAR ADHIKARI v. 85. ———— Effect of alienation.—Necessity for alienation.—Under the Hindu law, a permanent alienation by a shebait of endowed property, such as the creation of a patni, is not absolutely null and void. A permanent alienation by a shebait of endowed property under special circumstances of necessity is valid. Want of funds for repairing the temple and restoring the image of the idol is a necessity sufficient under the Hindu law to warrant such an alienation. TAYUBUNISSA BIKH v. SHAM KISHORE ROY

86. ———— Effect of alienation.—Decree obtained against shebait.—Res judicata.—As a general rule of Hindu law, property given for the maintenance of religious worship and of charities connected with it is inalienable. It is competent, however, for the shebait in charge of property dedicated to the worship of an idol, in his capacity of shebait and as manager of the estate, to incur debts and borrow money for the proper expenses of keeping up the religious worship, repairing the temples or other possessions of the idol, defending hostile litigious attacks, and other like objects. The power to incur such debts is to be measured by the existing necessity for incurring them, the authority of the shebait being in this respect analogous to that of a manager for an infant heir. It being competent for a shebait to borrow money for necessary purposes, it follows that judgments obtained against a former shebait in respect of debts so incurred are binding upon succeeding shebaites, who form a continuing representation of the debutter property. But before applying the principle of res judicata to such judgments, the Court should be satisfied that the judgments relied upon are untainted by fraud or collusion, and that the necessary and proper issues have been raised, tried, and decided in the suits which led to them. Execution of such judgments should be decreed only against the rents and profits of the debutter property. PROSUNNO KUMARI DEBBA v. GOLAB CHAND BABOO

87. ———— Purchaser of endowed property, Notice to.—Evidence of necessity for alienation.—A plaintiff who seeks to set aside an alienation of lands on the ground that they are debutter, i.e., dedicated in perpetuity to support the worship of an idol, must give strong and clear evidence of the endowment. The mere fact that the rents of a particular mehal have been applied for a considerable period to the worship of an idol is not sufficient proof that the mehal is debutter. The shebait or manager of a debutter estate has authority, where the purposes of the endowment require it, to raise money by alienating a part of the estate, his position being analogous to that of a manager of an infant heir under the Hindu law. The written conveyance of certain lands stated them to be debutter, and to be alienated to raise money to repair the temple of the idol. In a suit to set aside the alienation, it appeared that at the time of the transaction the temple required repairs, but that the vendor had not applied the whole of the purchase-money to that purpose. There being no evidence of any collusion on the part of the purchaser, or that he was aware at the time of the purchase that the money was to be applied otherwise than the conveyance expressed, Held that the sale was valid.

HINDU LAW—ENDOWMENT—continued.8. ALIENATION OF ENDOWED PROPERTY
—continued.

Even if it had appeared that the purchaser had notice that the whole of the purchase-money was not required for the purposes of the endowment, but that part of it was to be expended on other objects, an action would not lie to set aside the sale altogether, since the purchaser would be entitled to be reimbursed so much of the money as had been legitimately advanced. DOORGANATH ROY v. 88. — Right to charge endowed property—Necessity—Suit on bond.—A suit to recover on a bond given by the de facto manager of a muth as a charge on the muth having been decreed by the Subordinate Judge. Held that as the obligor had turned the previous manager out of possession, and as his own right to possession was contested at the time he executed the bond, he was in no better position than a trespasser and wrong-doer. Where a bond as a charge on a muth is given for antecedent claims against a muth, of which a portion would, but for the fresh right of suit given by the bond, have been barred by limitation, and where no proceedings have been taken for sequestration or attachment of the property, there is no necessity for giving the bond, and a suit to recover cannot succeed. RAM CHURN POORIE v. 89. — Alienation of pagoda property by managers—Purchasers from managers, Duties of.—The paid managers of the affairs of a pagoda have no power as such to encumber the pagoda property, or to settle large outstanding demands against it. Persons dealing with such managers are bound to enquire into the extent of their authority. A person bound to make an enquiry, and failing to do so, will be held to have notice of all such facts as that enquiry, if made, would have brought to his knowledge. SAMBANDA MUDALIYAR v. NANASAMRANDAPANDARA . . . 1 Mad., 296

90. — Alienation of the management of a public charity—Sale of religious office—Effect of partial illegality in alienation—Suit for specific performance of agreement to partition—Form of decree.—In a suit for specific performance of an agreement for partition, it appeared that amongst other property considered liable to partition, was the huk right of a public choultry and certain lands alleged to belong to the same charity. The said huk right had been sold by auction to that member of the family who bid the highest price, and was purchased by the plaintiff. On a suit being brought to enforce the terms of the arrangement, Held that the sale by auction of the huk right was illegal, but that, as such illegality did not affect the other terms of the arrangement, it might be enforced as to the rest of the property. ALAGAPPA MUDALIAR v. to the religious services of an idol, the rents of the land constitute in legal contemplation the property of the idol, and the shebait has not the legal property, but only the title of manager of a religious endowment, and cannot alienate the property, though he might create proper derivative tenures and estates conformable to usage. 101. Mortgage of lands attached to a muth—Bom. Act II of 1863, s. 8, cl. 8, Effect of declaration by Government under—Power of a jangam guru to alienate land given to muth—How far such alienation is binding on his successor in the office.—The defendant was in possession of three fields (survey Nos. 222, 360, and 372) as mortgages under mortgages executed by one G, who was the plaintiff's guru and his predecessor in office as jangam, or presiding lingayat priest of the muth. Two of the fields (Nos. 360 and 372) had been mortgaged in 1863. G died in 1874, and in 1882 the plaintiff brought this suit to recover possession of the fields on the ground that it was not competent to G to mortgage them beyond the period of his own life, and also on the ground that, under cl. 8 of s. 8 of Bombay Act II of 1863, they were not alienable from the muth. It appeared that in 1862 a sanad was issued by Government to G declaring the land in dispute to be his personal inam, and continuable for ever as transferable private property, subject only to chaotai and nazarana. This sanad was withdrawn in 1868, and another sanad was issued, declaring the land to be service emolument appertaining to the office of jangam, on condition that the holders thereof should perform the usual services to the community, and should continue faithful subjects of the British Government. The sanad stated as follows:—"As this vatan is held for the performance of service, it cannot be transferred, and in consequence no nazarana will be levied." The nazarana, which had been levied under the sanad of 1862 for the years from 1861-62 to 1865-66, was refunded. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the land in question. The circumstance of the repayment of nazarana and chaotai for the years 1861-66 clearly showed that, in the opinion of the Government, a personal inam had been wrongly granted to G by the sanad of 1862, and there was nothing to show that G objected to the decision ultimately arrived at by Government. After the passing of Bombay Act II of 1863, it would not have been open to him—as it was not open to his mortgagee now—to contest that decision in any way. For by s. 16, cl. (d), of that Act, it is competent to Government to determine any question as to whether or not any lands are held for service, and the decision of Government, when once made, is final. Since 1868 there could be no question that the lands comprised in the sanad had not been alienable by the jangam of the muth beyond his lifetime, and as they belonged to a service vatan, they were held on a tenure of successive life-estates. After the death of G, therefore, the plaintiff, as G's successor in office, was entitled to the whole of the inam land claimed by him. JAMAL SAHEB v. MURGAYA SWAMI

102. Liability of sarathan of muth for money borrowed by the swami.—The swami of a muth presumably has no private property, and must be assumed to be pledging the credit of the muth when he borrows money for the purposes of the muth. [I. L. R., 9 Bom., 422]

103. Effect of execution proceedings against successor.—In 1866 F (the father of the plaintiff) sued his brothers H and G (one of the two sons of H and defendant No. 1) to establish his right to a third share of the management of certain lands granted for the maintenance of a Hindu temple. In that suit F obtained a decree that he should have the exclusive management every third year, but was ordered to pay costs. To enforce payment of these costs, H, in execution of the decree, attached the third share of F in the management of the land. The share was accordingly sold by auction in January 1870 to a Marwadi, who afterwards in May 1870 re-sold it to the appellant T (another son of H and defendant No. 2). F died in 1876. In 1879 the plaintiff sued G and the appellant (the two sons of H) for his share of the management. It was contended for the defence that, as the execution sale of January 1870 was not set aside within a year, the right to treat it as void by the plaintiff was barred by lapse of time. Held that in cases of endowments, when the founder has vested in a certain family the management of his endowment, each member of it succeeds to the management per formam doni, and that therefore, on F's death, the plaintiff's right to succeed to the management was quite unaffected by

on one occasion disclaimed the trust. The trust property was attached and sold in execution of personal decrees passed against the settlor and another member of his family. The widow of the latter, after the death of the settlor, sued to recover the land from the execution-purchaser as heir to the settlor. Held the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the land. REPA JAGHET v. The debt have been contracted by one who was in possession of the muth under a claim that he was the duly constituted head of the institution for the purposes of defending a suit brought by the head of another religious institution to eject him and to establish certain rights over the muth. A decree for ejectment was obtained, but some of the pretensions of the plaintiff were successfully resisted. The present defendant was a receiver of the properties of the muth appointed by the Court in the course of that litigation. Held that the bond was not enforceable against the property of the muth. SAMINATHA v. A., 393, apply to the alienation of property by the de facto manager of an Hindu endowment. The possession of such manager cannot be treated as adverse to the endowment. Simble—Art. 91 of sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) has no application to a suit to set aside such alienation. UNNI v. KUNCHI AMMA, I. L. R., 14 Mad., 26, and SIKHER CHAND v. DALPUTTY SING, I. L. Where lands belonging to a temple were granted in miras by the manager of the temple, but not for a necessary purpose, and the successor of the grantor sued to eject the assignee of the grantee, Held that the effect of such a grant was to enable the grantee to hold the lands during the lifetime of the grantor, but would not confer on him any title binding on the successor in the management of the temple lands. RAMCHANDRA SHANKARAYA DRAVID v. 112. ————— Religious endowments—Mortgage of endowed property by de facto manager—Debt binding on the institution.—In a suit on a mortgage, dated April 1880, and comprising lands forming part of the endowment of a muth, it appeared that the mortgagor had been the rightful manager of the muth until 1876 when he was ousted, and consequently forfeited his office. The present defendant was appointed in 1877 to succeed him in the office of manager, but the mortgagor remained nevertheless in possession, and a suit by the present defendant to eject him was pending at the date of the mortgage. The plaintiff now sought to enforce his rights under the mortgage against the defendant and the property of which the defendant had been placed in possession as the result of the suit above referred to. Per Curiam.—The mortgagor was not disentitled to incur expenses so as to bind the rightful manager by the mere fact that the former was not de jure manager at the time the expenses were incurred, provided they were incurred for the preservation of the trust property or other justifiable purposes. On its appearing that the debt was incurred for the conduct of ceremonies in which the mortgagor, after his excommunication, was disqualified from taking part, and that all the circumstances of the case were known to the mortgagee,—Held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the amount of the mortgage-debt. KASIM SAIBA v. 113. ————— Hereditary managers—Void alienation—Adverse possession.—The hereditary managers of the property with which a religious foundation was endowed had purported to sell and assign the management and lands of the endowment to the representative of another institution, the first defendant's predecessor. Held that, there not being any custom of the foundation allowing such an assignment, it was beyond their legal competence, conveying no title. Purnak Valia v. Ravi Purnak Mutha, L. R., 4 I. A., 76; I. L. R., 1 Mad., 235, referred to and followed. The possession delivered to the purchaser was adverse to the vendors. After the twelve years' period of limitation, which expired in the lifetime of the vendor, whose son now sued to recover the hereditary managership and possession of the lands of the endowment, the suit was barred under Limitation Act XV of 1877. Held that there was no distinction between the claim to the office and the claim for the property in regard to the application of art. 124 of sch. II of the Act and of s. 28. If there were, art. 144 would apply to the claim for the property. In order to fix the starting point for limitation at a date later than that of the transfer, it was contended that the office and title were held in successive life-estates. If that contention had been right, the period of limitation would have commenced at the death of the plaintiff's father. The judicial committee were of opinion that it must be assumed that the origin of the endowment was by gift from the founder, and that, in accordance with the ruling in Juttendromohun Tagore v. Ganesdromohun Tagore, Narayan Bawa*, I. L. Lakshmiram Gorindram*, I. L. R., 12 Bom., 247, approved. Held also that the ekhar on which the claim was based could not be said to have been entered into for the benefit of the endowment, and whether the office of the priest was elective or hereditary, no holder of it could bind his successor by any act, unless it was for the benefit of the endowment. GIRIJANUND DATTA JHA v. The office of head of the muth was hereditary in the grantee's family. In 1886 an inam title-deed was issued to the then head of the muth, whereby the village was confirmed to him and his successors tax-free to be held without interference so long as the conditions of the grant were duly fulfilled. Yadaats addressed by tahsildars to the then head of the muth in 1872 and 1882 were put in evidence to show what the object of the grant was. It was found, regard being had to usage, that the trusts of the institution were the upkeep of the muth, the feeding of pilgrims, the performance of worship, the maintenance of a watershed and the support of the descendants of the grantees. From before 1840 it had been usual for the head of the muth for the time being to make grants to his brothers or younger sons for their maintenance. In 1842 the father of the present plaintiff, being then the head of the muth, granted certain lands in the village above referred to to his younger brother, the deed of grant being in terms absolute. The grantee died about thirty years before the suit, and the lands in question came into the possession of his widow (defendant No. 1) and a mortgagee from her (defendant No. 2), respectively. In 1863 the plaintiff's father placed certain other lands in possession of defendant No. 3 who paid rent therefor and received pottahs for some years from the plaintiff. In a suit by the plaintiff for possession of the lands in the possession of the defendants it was pleaded, inter alia, that the grant of 1842 was binding on him, and that defendant No. 3 had a right of permanent occupancy. Held (1) that the suit was not barred by limitation; (2) that the yadaats above referred to were admissible as indicating the general consciousness as to the nature of the grant of the village; (3) that the grant was an endowment in trust for the muth, and the charities connected therewith, and not merely a grant of property to the original grantee, on which certain trusts were engrafted so as to impose on him an obligation to apply a portion of the income of the village to those trusts; (4) that the grant of 1842 was valid for the lifetime of defendant No. 1 (who had become by marriage part of the family of a descendant of the original grantee), but that the property comprised therein was liable to revert to the representative of the muth on her death; (5) that the plaintiff, although he had issued pottahs, was entitled to recover possession of the lands occupied by defendant No. 3 and not to receive rent from him merely. SATHANAMA BHARATI v. 2. — Right of son to eject widow—Doctrines of factum valet.—A Hindu died leaving a widow and an adopted son, who continued, after his death, to reside in the same dwelling-house in which they had resided with the deceased during his lifetime, and which formed a portion of his estate. The son being an infant, the widow had the management of the house, and let a portion of it to tenants at a monthly rent. Subsequently the son sold the house, as his property by inheritance, to a stranger, who gave the widow and tenants a week's notice to quit. Held that the son, even if he had attained his majority, could not evict the widow, or authorize a purchaser to do so, without providing some other suitable dwelling for her; nor in any case could the tenants be turned out without a month's notice. It seems that the passage in Katanyana, 3 Colebrook's Digest, p. 133, is a restriction, and not a moral precept only, and that the heir of the deceased has not such a right in the dwelling of the family that he can at once, of his pleasure, turn out the females of the family, or sell it and give the purchaser a right to turn them out. MANGALA DEBI v. 3. — Co-parcener's widow—Right of co-parcener's widow to live in the dwelling-house—Disagreement between widows, no ground for the eviction of either.—Under the general rule of Hindu law prevailing in the Bombay Presidency, a co-parcener's widow is, in the absence of any special circumstances, entitled to reside in the family dwelling-house. The plaintiff sued to recover possession of a portion of the family dwelling-house in the actual possession and enjoyment of the defendant, who was the childless widow of his undivided brother. The plaintiff had offered her a residence in another house on condition of her vacating the part of the house in dispute. Pending the suit, the plaintiff died and was subsequently represented by his widow. Both the lower Courts awarded the plaintiff's claim on the ground of disputes between the two widows and also on the ground of the inconvenience and unhealthiness of the part of the house in the defendant's possession. The plaintiff had not suggested these points in his plaint, nor had the defendant complained of the unhealthiness of the premises. On appeal by the defendant to the High Court.—Held, reversing the decrees of the lower Courts, that the defendant had a right as a co-parcener's widow to live in the family house, and that there were no special circumstances exempting the case from the general rule of Hindu law—the mere fact of disputes existing between the defendant and the plaintiff's widow not justifying the eviction of the defendant. BAI DEVKOR v. on a debt incurred for family purposes.—A house, being ancestral property of a Hindu family, was sold in execution of a decree by which the decree-amount was constituted a charge on such property. The debt sued on had been incurred for the benefit of the family by the co-parceners for the time being, but since the death of such co-parcener's father,—Held the widow of the latter, who resided in the said house during her husband's lifetime, was not entitled as against a purchaser for value in good faith under such decree (but with notice that she resided and during her husband's life had resided in that house, and still claimed to reside there) to continue to reside for life in such portion of the house sold as she resided in subsequent to her husband's death. *Venkatammal v. The defendant was aware that the plaintiff (the mortgagor's widow) was residing in the house at the time of the Court-sale. In a suit brought by the plaintiff to establish her right to reside in the house in question,—Held that in the absence of any allegation that the mortgage effected by the plaintiff's husband was not for the benefit of the family, or was in any way in fraud of the plaintiff's rights, the defendant as auction-purchaser took the house free from the plaintiff's right of residence as a Hindu widow, notwithstanding the fact that he had notice of her claim. *MANILAL v. 9. ————— On the 29th June 1876, the plaintiff obtained a money-decree by consent against R, the father-in-law of the defendant. On the 24th of July 1876, the plaintiff attached a house of R. On the 12th October 1876, the defendant sued R for maintenance, and alleged that the house in question was the property of her deceased husband and R, and she claimed the right to continue to live in it. On the 10th of November 1876, and during the pendency of the defendant's suit against R, the house was sold under the plaintiff's decree against R, and the plaintiff himself became the purchaser. On the 20th of June 1877, the defendant obtained a decree against R in terms of the prayer of her plaint. On the 27th of August 1879, the plaintiff brought the present suit to eject the defendant from the house. Held that what the plaintiff bought from R was his right, title, and interest in the house, which being subject to the decree in the defendant's pending suit, the plaintiff's purchase was likewise subject to the same, and the circumstance that the plaintiff had placed a prior attachment on the house made no difference. The plaintiff therefore could not eject the defendant during her lifetime. PARVATI v. KISANSING

2. Gift to wife—Words of inheritance—Husband and wife—Immovable property.—It is not necessary in Hindu law, in order that a wife should take an absolute estate in immovable property under a deed of gift from her husband, that the gift should be made with such words of limitation as are ordinarily used to convey an estate of inheritance. The intention of the husband may be expressed in other ways, and is a matter of construction merely. *Koonj Behary Dhar v. Prem Chand Dutt, I. L. R., 5 Cal., 684; 5 C. L. 8. Gift of land—Registration, Effect of.—The plaintiff sued for possession of certain lands, alleging that they had been given to him under a deed of gift registered. It was found that no possession was given to him under the deed. It was contended for him that his title was complete without possession, as the deed had been registered, and that the object of the rule as to possession was to give publicity to the transaction. Held that the plaintiff was only entitled to the land of which he had been put into possession. According to Hindu law, in order to give complete validity to a gift of land as between donor and donee, the donee must be put into possession. Registration gives the donee neither actual, constructive, nor symbolical possession, and therefore cannot be regarded as equivalent to delivery and acceptance. *VASUDEV BHAT v. 10. Gift not followed by actual possession.—A Hindu merchant made an absolute and immediate gift of all his property to the widow of his daughter's grandson who lived with him, and in regard to whom he stood in loco parentis. It did not appear that the gift had been followed by possession, and the donor continued to carry on the business in his own name, until his death, which happened some two years afterwards. Held that the gift was valid. *Anunchand Rai v. the terms of the gift, or sale, entitled to possession, there is no reason why such gift or sale, though not accompanied by possession, whether of moveable or immovable property (where the gift or sale is not of such a nature as would make the giving effect to it to be contrary to public policy), should not operate to give the donee, or vendee, a right to obtain possession. *KALIDAS MULLICK v. At this time he was possessed of a one-third share in a certain partnership business. After the death of S, M, one of the daughters, sued N, the adopted son, for one-third of her father's property including his share in the partnership business. Held that, inasmuch as the donor had relinquished the subject of the gift, so far as he could, and had vested it in the donees, possession under the gift had passed to M. In 1878 E mortgaged to the plaintiff some of the land comprised in the deed of gift. E died in that year, and in 1882 his grandson conveyed the equity of redemption to the plaintiff, who was already in possession of the mortgaged land as mortgagee. In the year 1888, the plaintiff being dispossessed by M and the second defendant, to whom she had sold the land, he brought the present suit to recover possession. The defendants relied upon the gift. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to possession. At the time of the mortgage to him in 1878 E had not completed his gift to M by giving possession. He was therefore in a position to give the plaintiff a good title. It had not been shown that M had ever been treated as the owner of the equity of redemption. Held also that the circumstance that the plaintiff attested the deed of gift in 1878 could not affect his title, as the gift had not been completed by delivery of possession. *ABAJI GANGADHAR v. 16. ———— Delivery of possession—Transfer of Property Act, s. 123—Immovable and moveable property.—Assuming that delivery of possession was essential under the Hindu law to complete a gift of immovable property, that law has been abrogated by s. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act. The first paragraph of that section means that a gift of immovable property can be effected by the execution of a registered instrument only, nothing more being necessary. Semble—The same is the case under that section with regard to moveable property, provided that a registered deed (and not the alternative mode of delivery) be adopted as the mode of transfer. *DHARMODAS DAS v. 18. ———— Verbal gift of immovable property—Death of the donor—Possession given to the donee by the son of the donor.—One G, being possessed of certain lands which were his self-acquired property, died in 1878. On his death-bed he told his son, P (the plaintiff's father), to give these lands to his (G's) daughter, the defendant. In the following year (1879) P by a registered deed of gift gave the lands to the defendant. The deed contained the following recital:—"Our vadi (father) G has made a gift to you of his self-acquired lands, Nos. 101 and 102, of mouzah Vadgaon for your own and your children's maintenance, and has directed me (P) to execute an instrument according to law. I (P) hereby execute a deed of gift to you." Shortly after the execution of this document, the defendant was put into possession of the lands, and she admittedly continued in possession down to the commencement of this suit in 1888. The plaintiffs, who were the minor children of P, now sought to recover these lands from the defendant, alleging that on the death of their grandfather G the lands had devolved by inheritance upon his son P (their father), and contending that the latter had no power to make a gift of these to the defendant. The lower Court found that the question of P's competency to give the lands did not arise, as they had already been given to the defendant by his father G, and that P was simply an instrument in carrying out the wishes of his father and in executing the deed of gift to the defendant. On appeal, the District Judge considered that the point for determination was whether the gift by G to the defendant was valid by Hindu law, not having been accompanied by possession. He held the gift to be valid. On special appeal to the High Court, — Held, dismissing the appeal, that whether the gift by G to the defendant was to be regarded as a gift, possession being afterwards given to the defendant, or whether G was to be regarded as having constituted himself a trustee and having made P a trustee to carry out his wishes, the defendant was in lawful possession of the lands, and that the plaintiffs had neither by Hindu law nor otherwise any legal or equitable claim to have the deed of gift to the defendant cancelled. BRASKAR PURSHOTAM v. 19. ———— Gift without delivery of possession—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 123, 129—Immoveable property—Acceptance of gift—Registration.—P executed a deed of gift of certain property in favour of the plaintiff in 1877 before the Transfer of Property Act was passed, and the deed was duly registered. In 1881 P sold certain portions of the same property to the defendants, and gave possession to them of such portions. P died six years after the execution of the deed of gift, and after his death some of the title-deeds of the property covered by the deed of gift came into possession of the plaintiff. Both the lower Courts found that there had been no delivery of possession given by the donor nor acceptance by the donee. In a suit brought five years after the death of P for possession of the property, the subject of the alleged gift, — Held that mere registration was not sufficient to make the gift complete according to the Hindu law, under which some possession or acceptance by the donee was necessary; there being neither possession nor acceptance, the suit should be dismissed. Dagai Dabee v. Subsequently, being asked to endorse them, he said, "I am very weak, how can I sign so many papers? When I get a little strength, I will sign them. What cause have you for being anxious?" Held by PHILLIPS, J., that it was a good donatio mortis causa. A donatio mortis causa has not the same signification here as in England. Held on appeal by PEACOCK, C.J. —The gift was not governed by the strict principles of English law, but by the Hindu law. By English law there was a valid donatio mortis causa; assuming it to be a gift inter vivos, it was a valid gift by Hindu law, and the principal and interest secured by the Government papers, and not the mere paper, passed to the donee. In his lifetime he had transferred to K by gift mouzah R, a portion of his real estate. After his death J and P, his brothers, sued K for possession of mouzah R as being ancestral property. Their suit was dismissed, the Sudder Court finding it to be separate property. That Court found that K had acquired mouzah R from C by gift, and that K only took under this gift a life-interest in it. J and P having died, K made a gift of mouzah R to her agent, a reward for his faithful services. In a suit by N, son of J, as the heir of his uncle C, to set aside this gift to the agent as illegal.—Held on the finding that K had acquired the property from her husband by gift, that she did not take an absolute interest in the property under the gift, and her husband's heirs could question the validity of the gift to the agent. Held also that the gift to the agents, being made only out of motives of generosity, was invalid. *RUDR NARAIN SINGH v. brother, being the self-acquired immoveable property of his father, on the ground that under the Hindu law a father is not permitted to make a gift of immoveable property to one son to the injury of the other. Held (reviewing all the authorities and precedents on the subject) that, although prohibition of such a gift, on moral or spiritual grounds, may be implied by the texts of Hindu law, yet, where it is not declared that there is absolutely no power to do such acts, those acts, if done, are not necessarily void, and that therefore an exclusive gift to one son by the father of self-acquired immoveable property is not illegal. *SITAL v. V A lived with G at the time of his death, and had the whole of G's property, moveable and immoveable, left in his (V A's) possession. V A, before his death, made a gift of the said property to Y in consideration of her having been G's concubine for many years. In a suit brought by V R to recover the whole property from Y, she claimed it by virtue of the gift to her by V A. Held that the gift was invalid as against V R, who was entitled to the whole property, subject to the maintenance of Y as a concubine of G for many years; the High Court also directed the said maintenance to be secured for her (Y) by investment of a sufficient part of the property in trust for that purpose. *VRANDAVANDAS RAMDAS v. union with his sons and grandson—Gift valid—Hindu law.—Where there is a genuine gift by a father-in-law to his widowed daughter-in-law by way of affection, out of a small share of moveable property most of which was acquired by the donor while living in union with his sons and grandsons, the gift cannot be impeached as being opposed to the principles of Hindu law. HANMANTAPA v. VENKATA

(I. L. R., 11 Mad., 246)

37. ———— Gift to widow by member of joint Hindu family—Joint Hindu family—Maintenance—Construction—Gift presumed to be of life-estate only.—Disputes having arisen between the sole surviving members of a joint Hindu family and his brother's widow, an amicable arrangement was come to, and certain deeds were executed by both parties, under which the widow was placed in possession of a certain house. On the part of the brother-in-law it was recited that, with a view to permanently settling the matters in dispute, he had received in cash from the widow the value of his share in the house that she had been put in possession of the house and was in sole proprietary possession thereof; and that he had no connection whatever with it. Subsequently the widow executed a deed of gift purporting to convey to the donee an absolute proprietary title to the house. After her death, the brother-in-law brought a suit against the donee to recover possession of the house on the ground that the deed of gift could not convey to him more than the life-interest of the widow donor. Held that the deed of gift must be construed with reference to the nature of the general rights of the donor at the time of execution, as a Hindu widow in a joint Hindu family entitled only to maintenance. Rabutti Dosses v. Shishchunder Mullick, 6 Moore's I. A. L., and Dinonath Mukerji v. Gopal Churn Mukerji, 8 C. L. R., 87, referred to. Held also, having regard to the rules of the Hindu law regarding the possession by widows of joint family property in lieu of maintenance and to the experience of the Courts in connection with such matters, that it was for the donee to establish clearly and specifically that the donor, at the time when she executed the deed of gift, had any such absolute right of ownership as would entitle her to alienate the property for any interest beyond a life-estate. Held further that there was nothing in the deeds under which the donor obtained possession of the property, which placed beyond doubt the intention of the parties that she should be entitled to the absolute ownership of the property; and that her estate therefore could at best be regarded as a life-estate, and the deed of gift as binding upon the plaintiff during her lifetime, but not further. GANPAT RAO v. RAM CHANDRA . I. L. R., 14 All., 298

38. ———— Voluntary gift to relative in consideration of natural affection—Alienation by undivided member of joint family.—A member of an undivided Hindu family, consisting of himself, his adopted son, and his uncle, sold certain land belonging to the family to the plaintiff. In a suit by the plaintiff for a declaration of his title to, and for possession of, the land, it appeared that the sale was not justified by any circumstances of family necessity; and that the adoption (which was disputed) was a valid one. During the pendency of the suit the undivided uncle died, having made a gift of his property to his daughter-in-law, not for value, but in consideration of natural affection. Held, referring to Baba v. Timma, I. L. R., 7 Mad., 357, and Ponnusami v. Thatha, I. L. R., 9 Mad., 273, that the gift by the undivided uncle to his daughter-in-law was invalid, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a moiety of the land sold to him. VIRAYYA v. HANUMANTA

The proportionate rent on 2,320 fanams is 365 paras. This quantity of paddy . . . shall be enjoyed by you and your sons and grandsons hereditarily by receiving the same from my sons. After certain clauses restricting the mode of enjoyment and the power of alienation, the instrument proceeded, "In the event of the said kanom being paid, that money shall be received by my sons, and shall be invested on some other property which may be approved of by you and your sons and by my sons, and from that property you may receive income yearly and enjoy the same." You, from this day becoming possessor thereof, after deduction of the Government revenue, with the balance of the profits, will perform acts of charity (dan o khairath) and maintain the sons. For this purpose I execute this dan-patro." A died leaving C, a son by his first wife, two minor sons by B, and B, his widow. The minor sons of B died unmarried and without issue. B made a gift of the property to D, her daughter's son. But as long as I live, I shall keep the management of my own affairs in my own hands, and look after all the transactions of dihat, etc., myself, as heretofore." B sold and conveyed parcels of the property. In a suit by her daughter's son against the purchasers for a declaration of his reversionary right to the property sold,—Held that, under the terms of the petition, there was an absolute gift to B, and that, as the gift was not fettered by any restrictions, the alienation by B was good and valid. CHATTAR LAL SINGH v. 50. ———— Succession.—A, a Hindu, executed a deed of gift of certain villages in favour of his wife in the following terms: "The undermentioned villages have been granted as a gift to the Maharani for her necessary dehri expenses." The wife died a childless widow. Held that the gift from her husband was for life only, and that the villages in question were not liable, in the hands of her husband's heirs, to her debts. Held also the husband's heir was entitled to her moveable property as her heir, and that such property was in his hands chargeable with her debts. *SHEOTURUL RAM v. 51. ———— Gift to widow—Duration of a grant held by a Hindu widow made to her by her husband in his lifetime.—On the distribution of compensation under the Land Acquisition Act, 1870, the title of a widow to a village, she alleging it to be her property by absolute right, as a jaghir granted to her by her husband, came into contest. Her late husband's adopted son, being now possessed of the samindari within which the village was, disputed her right, alleging that the grant had been only for her maintenance, and claiming the whole compensation. The terms of the grant, if any had been expressed, were unknown. No written grant was produced. The judicial committee pointed out that an inquiry, directed by the Appellate Court below, as to whether a local custom existed for samindars to grant to their wives for life only, and if such custom was valid, was inappropriate, inasmuch as no custom at all, in its legal sense of something exceptional to the general law, was in question. The power of the husband as samindar to have made such a grant for life or for more was not in dispute. All that was known was that the widow had received rents for about twenty-six years. There was no sufficient evidence for holding that the village had been alienated in perpetuity. The judgment of the District Judge, dividing the compensation equally between the parties, was maintained, the widow being treated as holding for life. *BRAJA KISORA DEVU GARU v. She did so by deed of gift (hibbanama), giving it to their daughter, "to be enjoyed by her, her sons, and grandsons, etc., one after another; the other heirs not to have any concern with it." Held that the plaintiff as the daughter's daughter had no right to share therein with her brothers, the daughter's sons. *SRINATH GANGOPADHYA v. of the donee, which took place less than three years before suit. The deed of gift was not produced, and it did not appear that the donee, who had been placed in possession of the land and had retained it for thirty-seven years, was a widow at the time of the gift. Held that the plaintiffs were entitled to a decree, there being no ground to presume that a life-interest merely was intended to pass under the gift. RAMASAMI c. PAPAYYA . I. L. R., 16 Mad., 466

54. ———— Gift to daughter with remainder to grandsons—Right to mesne profits uncollected in lifetime of daughter—Mesne profits.—A Hindu by a deed dated in 1840 gave his daughter, a childless widow, an estate for life in certain property, with remainder on her death to his brother's grandsons. The daughter was put in possession, was dispossessed in 1858, and died in 1862. Under the terms of the deed, the property then went to the survivor of the two grandsons, who in 1864 sold his rights and interests in the property. In 1865 the purchaser brought a suit and recovered possession from the defendants. His representatives now sued for mesne profits of the property from 1860 to 1865. Held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to mesne profits which had accrued due, but were uncollected in the lifetime of her daughter; that such mesne profits would go to her heirs, who would alone be entitled to them. *GURU PRASAD ROY c. 55. ———— Gift on contingency—Lapse of gift.—By an ikrar executed by A, a Hindu widow, in favour of B, a son of another wife of her deceased husband, after reciting that her husband had given her a taluk as stridhan, but that he had not empowered her to adopt a son, it was thus directed: "You are the son of my co-wife; you are still living; the funeral cake will be preserved to us by you; and on my death the taluk is your rightful property. After my death, out of the whole profits for my two daughters, separating by demarcation *raiya*ts with jummas to the extent of Rs200, whatever shall remain you shall gain." Held that the vesting of the gift was contingent upon B surviving A; and that, upon the death of B during the lifetime of A, the gift lapsed. *KISHTO SOONDERY DEBBA v. 56. ———— Gift in ikrarnamah—Succession as heiress—Survivorship.—An ikrarnamah, to which I K and T K were parties, contained the following stipulation: "After death of me, I K, my deceased son's widow, D K, will be the heiress; and after the death of me, T K, my estate shall devolve on Mussamuts R K and D K in equal moieties; should both R K and D K die, then their share shall be enjoyed and appropriated by the surviving ladies, but none of them shall ever be able to make gift or alienation to anybody. After the demise of us five ladies, Mussamut N, daughter of my deceased son, P B, and N A, daughter of I K, shall be heiresses and proprietors in equal shares." Held that, according to the true construction of the ikrarnamah, N K was not entitled to succeed as heiress until after the death of all the ladies, and therefore that her son could not, after her death, claim through her while B. K. was alive. JOYPRKASH BHUGOOT v. BHUGWAN DASS. Marsh, 589

57. ——— Gift of land as "kasi or badi."—Reversion of gift to grantor—Canarese Mapilla marriage.—Upon the marriage of his daughter, a Canarese Mapilla executed to the husband a deed of gift of certain land to be enjoyed, but not alienated, by the wife and her issue from generation to generation. It was recited in the deed that the gift was made as "kasi or badi." The former term implies that the property reverts to the grantor on the dissolution of the marriage; the latter means a gift to a bride by her relations. The wife died in 1877, leaving a daughter, who also died before suit. The grantor sued the husband to recover the land on the ground that it reverted to him on the death of his daughter in 1877. Held that upon the true construction of the deed of gift the grantor could not recover. ISMAIL BEARI v. PANDRANGI SUBRAMMA. I. L. R., 7 Mad., 28

59. ——— Gift conditional on liability for maintenance—Liability of son for maintenance of family.—Where a father executed a deed of gift in favour of his son with the condition that the son should take the property subject to the same liability in respect of the maintenance of the family as it was subject to in the hands of the father,—Held that this was not an obligation entered into by father or son as a matter of contract, but a reservation in the father's gift which did not give the son a greater right to be maintained at the expense of the father, or in the family-house, than he had before. *HURENHUR MOOKERJEE v. 60. ——— Gift to Brahmans—Restriction against alienation—Rule of perpetuities.—According to Hindu law, a restriction against alienation in a gift of land to Brahmans is inoperative as being a condition repugnant to the nature of the grant. Where a grantor creates a secular estate with a religious motive, the grant does not stand on the same footing with a religious endowment, and is not exempt from the rule as to perpetuities. *ANANTHA TIRTHA CHARIAR v. independently of the "Transfer of Property Act," Act IV of 1882 (which may, or may not have been expressed so as to lay down, in favour of absolute gifts, a rule more positive), is that indefinite words of gift are calculated to convey all the interest of the grantor it being also necessary to read the whole of an instrument in order to gather the intention. A gift being thus expressed,—"I put a stop to my interest in those talukhs, and withdraw my enjoyment thereof, and I make them over to you,"—Held that this must be read with what preceded it, viz., "in order that you may perform those religious ceremonies, celebrate the festivals satisfactorily, and may provide for your own support, by having the property under your authority and control;" and that the words of gift must be taken to be limited by the purpose of the gift; the whole taken together showing that the donor's intention was that the donee should take the property for life only. *KALIDAS MULLICK v. My wives shall perform the ceremonies according to the shastras, and bring him up, and until that adopted son comes of age, those executors shall look after and superintend all the property, moveable and immovable, in my own name or beuami left by me, also that adopted son: when he comes to maturity, the executors shall make over everything to him to his satisfaction. God forbid, but should this adopted son die, and my younger brother N have more than one son, then my wives shall adopt a son of his. If at that time N has not a son eligible for adoption, they shall adopt another son of S, and the wives and executors shall perform all the aforementioned acts." In a suit by one of G's widows as heir of her husband to set aside his will and recover half his property, it appeared that the abovementioned ceremonies had been performed by one widow only. Held that according to the true construction of the will (which was established by the evidence) there was a gift of his property by the testator to a designated person independently of the performance of the ceremonies. *NIDHOOMONI DEBYA v. The distinction between what is description only, and what is the reason or motive for a gift or bequest, may often be fine; but it must be drawn from a consideration of the language and the surrounding circumstances. *Nidhoomoni Debya v. 64. — Transfer of shares in joint family estate by the head of the family and his sons to minor grandson—Partial failure of gift, Effect of.—In a joint family, under the Mitakshara, consisting of a grandfather, his son, and that son's son, in pursuance of a family arrangement, the first, with the consent of the second, made by deed a gift of the whole of the ancestral estate to the third, including with him possible brothers that might be born thereafter. The father, in lieu of his share in the ancestral estate, received money for the payment of debts incurred by him. Possession was given to the minor through his mother, appointed by the deed of gift to be his guardian. The minor then died, and the mother retained possession. The family estate, on the death of the grandfather, was attached by one of the father's creditors who held a decree against him; and in a suit to avoid the deed of gift it was held that the transfer to the minor, having been made in good faith and for good consideration, was valid; and that, though the gift to possible brothers could not take effect, the gift by the head of the family with the consent of the son to the next generation, of which the only existing member, viz., the minor grandson, was put into possession, was valid. It was not a partition, for (according to the Mitakshara, Ch. I, s. 5, v. 31) there could be no partition directly between grandfather and grandson while the father was alive. But it was a family arrangement partaking so far of the nature of a partition that the father received a portion and was thenceforth totally excluded; and quoad ultra, the grandfather surrendered his interest to the grandson. RAI BISHENCHAND v. 65. — Gift to a class—Construction of family settlement—Rule for gift to unborn grandsons Partial failure of gift, Effect of.—Where the intention of a donor is to give a gift to two named persons capable of taking that gift, although it is also his intention that other persons unborn at the date of the gift should afterwards come in and share therein, the part of the gift which is capable of taking effect should be given effect to, notwithstanding that the intention of the donor cannot be carried out in its entirety. 66. — Vested and contingent interest.—A will made by a Hindu contained the following clause:—"I bequeath to my elder daughter Rs 25,000, subject to the condition that she shall invest the same in lands . . . shall enjoy the produce . . . and shall transmit the corpus intact to her male descendants." Within a month after the testator's death his eldest daughter was delivered of a son, who died in a few months. She died subsequently, leaving the plaintiff, her husband, but no male issue, her surviving. The plaintiff sued as heir of his son to recover the amount of the above bequest. Held that, as the daughter's son never acquired a vested interest in the bequest, the plaintiff's suit must be dismissed. SRINIVASA v. DANDAYUDAPANI

[I. L. R., 12 Mad., 411]

67. — Conveyance by a Hindu without male issue—Adoption pendente lite—Adoption from improper motive—Will.—A conveyance by a Hindu, without male issue at the date thereof, will bind his subsequently born or adopted male issue. Such issue at birth takes a vested interest in such property only as is that of their father at that time. C, a Hindu Brahmin without male issue, executed, on the 10th September 1856, a bakhash-patra (a deed of gift) to M containing words to the following effect: "I have given to you as gift and charity my property at —, together with my moveable property. (Here follow the particulars of the property.) The garden and house, etc., etc, I have given to you as gift this day of my own accord, and I have made the same over to you. You shall pay the Government assessment and village expenses, and you and your grandsons should enjoy the same property generation after generation and live in peace there. As long as I live, I will take the profits and you should maintain me as if I were one of the members of your family . . . I have no ownership whatever in the property; the ownership belongs to you from this day. This day I owe no money to anybody. Whatever property there may be after my death, other than that described above, is all given to you. No person has any claim thereto; the entire ownership belongs to you. I have given in writing this deed in sound mind and of my own accord." The document was registered on the 4th October 1856. M was put in possession of the property and managed it for some time. He paid the Government assessment and held receipts for the same. On the 6th January 1859, C addressed a letter to the Assistant Magistrate of the place, purporting to revoke the bakhash-patra, and he (C) was restored to possession by that officer. In 1859, M brought a suit (No. 448 of 1859) against C for the property. Before any decree was passed in it, C, on the 6th June 1859, adopted the plaintiff, who was then eight years of age. The plaintiff was not made a party to that suit. On the 2nd April 1860, the Munsif made a decree in favour of M, holding that C had executed the bakshishpatra and given possession of the property to M under it. He directed the property to be restored to the possession of M, to be held according to the terms of the bakshishpatra. C appealed, but subsequently withdrew his appeal, admitting the execution of the bakshishpatra and agreeing to give over the property to M according to the terms of the Munsif's decree. M accordingly obtained possession of the property. On the 16th March 1874, the plaintiff brought the present suit against the grandson of M (M then being dead) for a moiety of the property on the ground that C, his adoptive father, could not alienate more than one-half of the property. Both the lower Courts allowed the plaintiff's claim, the Court of first instance being of opinion that the document was a gift, and did not bind the plaintiff, and the Appellate Court holding that it was not a gift, but a will, and that it had been revoked by the testator before his death. On appeal to the High Court,—Held that the document was a conveyance and not a will, and that it vested the property in M, the donee, subject to a trust regarding any surplus that remained of the income after payment of the Government assessment and village expenses in favour of C as long as he lived, and that the donor could not revoke it, inasmuch as the document contained no power of revocation. Held also that, inasmuch as the plaintiff had been adopted before the hearing and decree in suit No. 448 of 1859 and might have been made a party to it, but was not, he could not be bound by proceedings in that suit, and that he was therefore at liberty to re-open the question whether the bakshishpatra was intended by C, when executing it, to operate as a deed or as a will. An adoption pendente lite is not to be regarded in the same light as an alienation pendente lite. If a legitimate son has been born to C during the suit, such son, to be bound by a pending suit affecting his father's ancestral property, must have been made a party, and a son adopted during the suit is in the same position. The one at his birth and the other at his adoption would take a vested interest in his father's property according to the Hindu law in the Presidency of Bombay. The circumstances that C might have adopted the plaintiff for the purpose of endeavouring to defeat the bakshishpatra did not alter the case. As a sonless Hindu, he had a right to adopt a son, and he was not under any obligation to M not to adopt; and, even if he had so contracted, quære—whether such a contract would affect the validity of the adoption. RAMBHAT v. descendants nor any one else shall have any interest in any of the property herein mentioned. If the said S happen to be without descendants, the male offspring of my daughter K, your wife, shall enjoy the property equally, but no others shall have any interest therein; such is the swatantra karar executed with my free will and pleasure." S attained his majority, but died without issue. His elder brother sued for possession of the property under the above clause. Held that, since the plaintiff was a person capable of taking, subject to the life-interest, at the time when the gift was made, he was entitled to succeed. Semble—If the gift to the plaintiff had failed, the property would have reverted to the heirs of the settlor on S's death without issue. Ram Lal Sett v. 69. ———— Hindu widow's power of alienation—Operation of gift by her to two donees, one of whom could not take—Inheritance in a village community in Oudh—Wajib-ul-narz modifying the Mitakshara law.—A clause in the wajib-ul-narz of a village in Oudh authorized any co-parcener not having male issue, or his widow, to make a gift of his share in the village to a daughter or a daughter's son; the intention apparent from this, and from a further provision as to the descendants of a sharer's daughter, being to modify the law otherwise prevailing, viz., the Mitakshara, and authorize the introduction of a daughter, or her son, and their descendants, male or female, in priority to brothers or nephews of the sharer. Held that such introduction was authorized, and that the inheritance, where the widow had made a gift of it in favour of a daughter, was transmitted to the daughter's daughter, the gift being of more than the donor would have taken as a widow. The gift was to the daughter and to her husband jointly. Held that, the gift being invalid as to the husband, the daughter took the whole estate given on the general principle of gifts to two persons jointly, where they failed as to one of them, operating entirely for the benefit of the other who could take, declared in Hampsey v. Taylor, (Ambler, 139), which, not depending on any peculiarity of English law, was applicable here. NANDI SINGH v. SITA RAM

5. REVOCATION OF GIFTS.

70. ———— Gift made under mistake of law—Right to revoke gift.—By Hindu law a man may make a gift of any of his property binding as against himself. Even when a deed of gift is voidable, on the ground of fraud, accident, or mistake, it is a question for the discretion of the Court whether cancellation or delivery up ought to be ordered. 1. RIGHT OF GUARDIANSHIP.

1. ——— Age of discretion—Father's right to custody of child.—The legal age of discretion of Hindus in India is uniformly sixteen years. Up to that age the father has an undoubted right to the custody of his male children. RE HEMNATH BOSE [1 Hyde, 111]

2. ——— Guardian of adopted son—Act XX of 1864—Natural and adoptive parents.—The natural father of a minor who has been adopted into another family is not by Hindu law his proper guardian when either of the adoptive parents is living and willing to act as guardian. The residence of the minor with the adoptive parents is a part of the consideration for their adoption of a son, and, unless serious ill-treatment or incompetency on their part be proved, they and the survivor of them are the proper guardians. *LAKSHMIBAI v. 7. ——— Husband and wife—Infant wife—Marriage.—According to Hindu law, after marriage, a husband is the legal guardian of his wife's person and property, whether she is a major or minor. The marriage of an infant being under the Hindu law a legal and complete marriage, the husband has the same right as in other cases to demand that his wife shall reside in the same house as himself, except, under special circumstances, such as absolve the wife from the duty. *KATEERAM DOKAREE v. 9. ——— Right of relatives (after parents are dead) to custody of child—Nearest paternal relatives—Selection of guardian by Court.—The claims of relatives to the guardianship of a minor stand upon quite a different footing from those of parents. The nearest paternal relatives have no legal right to the immediate custody of a child on the death of its parents. In the absence of father or mother or guardian appointed by the father, the selection of a guardian for a Hindu minor is to be made by the Court, as it represents the ruling power. *KISTO KISSOR NEOGHY v. Even if there were a rule of Hindu law which in such a case inflicted a forfeiture of such right, such rule could not, with reference to the provisions of Act XXI of 1850, be enforced. Where accordingly, because a Hindu had been deprived of caste for the reason above mentioned, a person sued to have the custody of the infant himself as her guardian in lieu of her father, and as such to be declared empowered to arrange for her marriage to a suitable husband, basing his suit on Hindu law,—Held that such suit was not maintainable. KANAKI RAM v. 14. ——— Right of guardianship.—Right of father to give his daughter in marriage.—Conduct of father forfeiting such right.—Suit by a father to restrain his wife from giving their daughter in marriage without his consent.—The plaintiff and B, the second defendant, were husband and wife belonging to the Prabhu caste, and lived together in the house of the first defendant, who was R's father, until the year 1880. In 1877 a daughter, S, had been born to them. In 1880 the plaintiff was convicted of theft and sentenced to two years' imprisonment. At the end of his term of imprisonment he did not return to live with his father-in-law, but went to reside in his own father's house, where in 1884 he requested his wife R to join him with their daughter. R refused, and she and S continued to live in the house of the first defendant, her father. The plaintiff then married a second wife. In November 1885, S having attained nine years of age—an age at which it is customary for Prabhus to seek husbands for their daughters demanded his daughter S from the defendants, who, however, refused to deliver the girl to the plaintiff. In May 1886, the plaintiff filed this suit against the defendants, complaining that they were about to have his daughter S married to her cousin without his (the plaintiff's) consent. He prayed that he might be declared entitled to the custody of his daughter, and for an injunction against her marriage without his consent. On filing this suit he obtained a rule nisi for an injunction against the defendants. Held that, pending the hearing of this suit, he was entitled to the injunction asked for. NANABHAI GANPATRAO DHARAYAN v. 17. ——— Contract made without authority.—Necessity for sale.—Under the Hindu law, a contract made by a guardian without authority cannot bind the minor. Even if it is desirable that a minor should have any benefit, such as increase to a very small income, from some undertaking or enterprise, e.g., obtaining a lease of certain rents, that circumstance is not sufficient to constitute a necessity for the mother and guardian to mortgage the minor's ancestral property with a view to secure such benefit. RADHA PRASAD SINGH v. The plaintiff, who was then a minor, claimed through his natural father, R, to be C's heir. This claim was disputed by V on behalf of his son, the defendant, who was also a minor. In 1863, pending legal proceedings between them, R and V compromised the dispute, and agreed that the muth and the property appertaining to it should be divided between the plaintiff and the defendant in equal shares. In the present suit the plaintiff sought to set aside the compromise made on his behalf by his natural father, N, on the ground that N had no authority to make it, and that there was no necessity for it. Held that the plaintiff's natural father was his proper guardian to assert his rights as adopted heir against rival claimants, and that the compromise was binding. *NIRVANAYA v. 21. — Partition by minor's mother as guardian—Partition made during minority—Suit to set aside a partition on the ground of fraud.—A partition made by a mother as the guardian of her minor son, a member of an undivided Hindu family, is valid, and if just and legal, will bind the minor. When the minor arrives at full age, he may apply to have the division set aside if it can be shown to be illegal or fraudulent, or even if it was made in such an informal manner that there are no means of testing its validity. CHANVILAPA v. DANAYA I. L. R., 19 Bom., 598

22. — Power of mother as guardian of minor to sell her deceased husband's estate—Minor's estate—Effect of omission of the minor's name in the sale deed.—Under Hindu law, the mother, as guardian of her minor son, has authority to sell her husband's estate in order to pay off his debts, and the omission of any reference to the minor in the deed of sale does not render it ineffectual if it is proved that it was her intention to deal with the son's interest, and not merely with any interest which she might have herself. MURARI v. TAYANA (I. L. R., 20 Bom., 286)

23. — Authority of guardian to borrow money for funeral ceremonies of minor's father—Liability of the estate for such debt.—On the death of his father, the minor defendant was taken charge of by one N, his father's cousin, who also took possession of the estate of the deceased. To defray the expenses of the funeral ceremonies of the deceased, N borrowed money from the plaintiff, who now sued to recover the amount from the estate of the deceased. Held that N, as nearest male relative and guardian, according to Hindu law, of the orphan minor, had authority to bind the estate in the hands of the minor so far as the loan was necessary to secure the proper performance of the funeral ceremonies of the minor's father. *NATHURAM v. HINDU LAW—HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Suit for restitution of conjugal rights—Desertion—Cruelty—Insanity of husband—Limitation—Act XV of 1877 (Limitation Act), s. 23, sch. ii, arts. 34, 35, and 120.—The texts of the Hindu law relating to conjugal cohabitation and imposing restrictions upon the liberty of the wife, and placing her under the control of her husband, are not merely moral precepts, but rules of law. The rights and duties which they create may be enforced by either party against the other, and not exclusively by the husband against the wife. The Civil Courts of British India, as occupying the position in respect of judicial functions formerly occupied in the system of Hindu law by the king, have undoubtedly jurisdiction in respect of the enforcement of such rights and duties. The Civil Courts of British India can therefore properly entertain a suit between Hindus for the restitution of conjugal rights, or for the recovery of a wife who has deserted her husband. It is not necessary, as a condition precedent to such suits, the parties being Hindus, that there should be any demand by the plaintiff and refusal by the defendant. The provisions of arts. 34 and 35 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act cannot be taken as applicable to suits of this description. To hold that they did apply would be to introduce serious innovations into the personal law of the Hindus (and of the Mahomedans) which could not have been contemplated by a statute of the nature and scope of the Limitation Act. The limitation applicable to suits of the present nature is that of art. 120 of the second schedule, read with s. 23 of the Limitation Act. Desertion by a wife of her husband is permitted by the Hindu law under certain circumstances, but the immunity of the husband will not justify his desertion by the wife. In any case, desertion does not terminate the relation of husband and wife. A suit for restitution of conjugal rights could in such case only be effectually met by establishing a plea of some matrimonial offence on the part of the complainant such as would entitle the defendant to a separation. Legal cruelty on the part of the complainant may be a ground for refusing restitution of conjugal rights, or for imposing terms on the complainant. BINDA v. KACHILIA

2. ————— Commentaries and text-books—Mitakshara—Mayukha—Usage.—The commentaries and text-books embody, in many instances, the rules formed and enforced by custom, but custom, even on Hindu principles, may and must have power without their aid. They do not govern the usage of the country, save by a reflex process; it is the usage which adopts them, and they are law only because of this adoption, in the sense and within limits according to which their rules are accepted. Not merely the reception, but the exact extent of the reception, of any law book is governed by usage. In the Maratha country the Mitakshara is the principal authority upon Hindu law; but in doubtful cases it may properly be construed by the light of the Mayukha, the usage of the country having adopted the latter as well as the former. This course was followed in Vinayak Anandras v. Lakshimbai, 1 Bom., 116, where a different construction of the Mitakshara was allowed to prevail in Bombay from that which had been adopted for Bengal. BHAGIRATHAI v. KAHNUJINAY . 1 L. The law, therefore, to be applied in cases of inheritance is the usage of the country in which the suit arises (see Bom. Reg. II of 1826, s. 26). The customaries and text books embody in many instances the rules formed and enforced by custom, but custom, even on Hindu principles, may and must have power without their aid. They do not govern the usage of the country, save by a reflex process; it is the usage which adopts them, and they are law only because of this adoption in the sense and within the limits according to which their rules are accepted. 3. SPECIAL LAWS.

(a) COORG.

12. ——— Inheritance, Law of—Mitakshara law.—The ex-Rajah of Coorg died in England in 1879, leaving considerable moveable property which he had himself acquired and accumulated, chiefly by means of his pensions and some ancestral jewels and ornaments. By his last will and testament he left all his property to trustees in trust to pay thereout certain legacies, and to divide the residue in certain proportions among various members of his family. Some difficulty having arisen after his death regarding the distribution of his estate, the Court of Chancery stated a case and propounded certain questions under 22 & 23 Vict., c. 68, for the opinion of Her Majesty's late Supreme Court at Fort William in Bengal, with reference to the Hindu law as administered by that Court, and so far as the same was applicable to the facts set forth in the case stated. The first and chief question propounded was—"What school of Hindu law would govern the succession to the estate of the deceased Rajah, and the rights and interests of the members of his immediate family, with reference to the will and facts stated, and also supposing he had died without having made any testamentary disposition of his property?" In answer to this question, the Court held that the doctrines of the Benares school of Hindu law, as laid down in the Mitakshara, should govern the decision of the case regarding the succession to the estate of the deceased Rajah, on the ground that the Mitakshara is the leading authority of Hindu law throughout Southern India as well as Benares, and that the Court had no reason to suppose that the doctrines of the Mitakshara had been in any way varied or altered by any text book recognized as an authority in Coorg, although some variations prevail in various parts of Southern India. The Court were further of opinion that the doctrines of the same school of Hindu law would govern the case, supposing the Rajah died without having made any testamentary disposition of his property. The succession to the property of a Hindu is governed by the laws which regulate his religious rites and ceremonies, and not by the domicile of himself or his family. LOUIS v. 15. ——— Custom—Joint family—Joint and ancestral property.—Cutchi Memons are governed by the Hindu law of inheritance in the absence of proof of special custom. A custom alleged to exist among Cutchi Memons of recognizing no difference between ancestral and self-acquired property held not proved. Four brothers of the Cutchi Memon community carried on trade with capital inherited from their father. Large profits were made in the course of business. It was alleged that some of the profits were made by means of borrowed capital, and some arose out of a commission business in which the capital of the firm was not used at all; and it was contended that such profits could not be considered as ancestral funds. It appeared, however, that the entire business was carried on by the same firm. There were common books, common expenses, and a common staff. The borrowed money was put into the general cash with the original capital. Held that the whole property was ancestral. Accumulations which blend, as they accrue, with the original estate partake of the character of that estate. Moreover, the loans in question and the extension of business to which they led might have produced heavy losses instead of great profits, and the family property would have been liable to debts so incurred. The family property, being thus subject to liabilities arising from the loans, was entitled to participate in any benefits resulting from them. MAHOMED SIDDICK v. AHMED. ABDULA HAJI ABDUSATAR v. 19. ———— Gujarati Jains settled in Belgaum—Succession among Jains—Rights of illegitimate sons of a Jain—Division into four castes—Dassa Porwad caste of Jains.—The Courts in India have always recognized the existence of four castes, viz., Brahmins, Kshatriyas, Vaishyas, and Shudras. Jains are dissenters, and are mostly of Vaishya origin. A Jain converted into orthodox Hindu faith returns to the caste from which he traces his first descent. The four main divisions of Jains are: Pramars, Oswal, Agarwal, and Khandewal. Unless a special custom to the contrary be established, the ordinary Hindu law governs succession among the Jains. Ordinary Hindu law is that of the three superior castes. Under the ordinary Hindu law, illegitimate sons do not inherit, but are only entitled to maintenance. Held that a Jain of the Dassa Porwad caste was governed by the general Hindu law applicable to the three regenerate castes, being, though not a Brahmin, certainly not a Shudra, but a Vaishya by origin, and having as such carried this law with him from Gujarat to the Belgaum District. Held therefore that his widow was his sole heir, and that his illegitimate sons were only entitled to maintenance. Quere—Whether even among Shudras the widow is altogether excluded from inheritance by illegitimate sons? BABA v. 4. MIGRATING FAMILIES.

27. — Hindu family migrating—Presumption as to law applicable.—In a case where a Hindu family migrates from one territory to another, if they preserved their ancient religious ceremonies they also preserve the law of succession. The presumption is, until the contrary be proved, that the family so migrating have brought with them, and retain, all their religious ceremonies and customs; especially when the family is shown to have brought with it its own priests, who, and descendants after them, continued their ministrations down to the period of contest. *JUNARUDHEN MISSEER v. 36. — Conditions in wajib-ul-urs altering law of inheritance—Document intended to record village rights.—Conditions in village administration papers, purporting to interfere with or alter the ordinary rules of descent, will not be enforced. The law of inheritance, whether Hindu or Mahomedan, is a part of the law of this country, and as such overrides the provisions of a document which was not designed to record more than the rights of the village community. Small sections of society cannot be allowed to make special laws of descent for themselves. SARUFI v. MUHAMMAD RAM . 2 N. W., 227

37. — Private arrangement—Alteration of law.—A son by birth or adoption can for adequate reasons be disinherited; but the course of devolution prescribed by the law cannot be altered by a private arrangement; on the disinheritance of the son, the son's son becomes his grandfather's lawful heir. BALESHWAR TRIMBAK TENDULKAR v. 6. GENERAL RULES AS TO SUCCESSION.

39. — Preference of heirs—Ability to confer spiritual benefits—Capacity to offer oblations.—The rule of succession as laid down in the Dayabhaga rests upon the great principle of the entire Hindu law of succession to property that nearness in regard to the attributed capacity and sacred duty to confer spiritual benefits by the offering of funeral oblations, either immediately or mediately, confers the right to inherit temporal wealth. MUTTU VILAS BAGUNADA BANI KOLUNDAPURI NACHIAN alias KATTAMA NACHIAN v. 40. — Spiritual benefit rendered by heir.—Per MAHMOOD, J.—There is no difference between the Mitakshara and the Bengal schools of Hindu law regarding the principle that the right of inheritance is based on the spiritual benefit which the heir, by taking the estate, renders to the soul of the deceased proprietor. There is a difference between the two schools only on a matter of detail relating to questions of preference between various competing classes of heirs. JAFKI v. NAND RAM I. L. R., 11 All., 194

oblations to the deceased, or to ancestors of the deceased, in which oblation the deceased would participate. 44. — Bandhus ex-parte paterna—Bandhus ex-parte materna—Son of a sister—Sister's daughters.—Suit filed in 1891 to recover possession of certain land, the property of a Hindu, who died an infant, leaving him surviving his adoptive mother, who entered into possession and enjoyed the property till her death in 1890. It appeared (1) that in 1861 the deceased and his adoptive mother had conveyed absolutely certain of the properties to the widow of one of his first cousins on his adoptive father's side for her maintenance and that of her daughter, and that it had been assigned by her to A, B, and C; (2) that other portions of the property had been conveyed in 1889 by the same persons, with the concurrence of D, as a gift to the daughters of the adoptive sisters of the deceased; (3) that D was the son of a sister of the adoptive mother. The plaintiffs were grandsons of the brother of the deceased's adoptive father, being respectively the sons of his daughters. Held (1) that the plaintiffs, being bandhus ex-parte paterna, were preferential heirs to D, who was a bandhu ex-parte materna; (2) that the sister's daughters had no title, whether by the law of inheritance or under the gift asserted by them. SUNDRAMMAL v. 45. ———— Father's sister's daughter's son—Bhinna gotra-sapinda—Succession of cognates.—H., a Hindu, died leaving a widow and a son of a first cousin, viz., the son of his father's sister's daughter. Held that, on the death of the widow, the latter, viz., the son of his father's sister's daughter, being a bandhu or bhinna gotra-sapinda of H., was entitled to succeed to his property. In regard to the succession of cognates, there seems no difference in the rules laid down in the Mayukha and the Mitakshara, and under the Mitakshara law succession depends upon propinquity and not upon religious efficacy. *PAROT BAPALAL SEVAKRAM v. [L. L. R., 19 Bom., 681]

46. ———— Succession of bandhu—Priority of mother's half-brother over sons of father's paternal aunt—Mitakshara law.—The statement of bandhus entitled to inherit given in the Mitakshara, Ch. II, s. 6, is not an exhaustive one. The maternal uncle of the deceased is omitted, but the sons of that uncle are specified. The omission to mention a maternal uncle does not signify that he is excluded from the first class of bandhus. The grounds of the judgment in Gridhar Lal Roy v. Government of Bengal, 1 B. L. R., P. C., 44 : 12 Moore's I. A., 448, apply not only to the heirship of a maternal uncle as against the claim in default of heirs, but also apply equally to questions between nearer and more remote bandhus. A maternal uncle is accordingly an heir, though not specified in the Mitakshara list, and he also has priority over the sons and grandsons of the paternal aunt of the father of the deceased, who are more remote than he is. A mother's brother by the half-blood stands on the same footing as her whole brother in regard to priority over more remote bandhus. A half-brother may be postponed to a whole brother, but there is no ground for his postponement to more distant kinsmen. MUTHUSAMI MUDALIYAR v. SIVAMBEDU MUTHUKUMARASWAMI MUDALIYAR

48. ———— Definition of samanodakas —“Gotra” of deceased person.—“Samanodakas” (or persons allied by a common oblation of water) belonging to the “gotra” (race or general family) of a deceased person are, according to Hindu law, sufficiently cognate to succeed to property in default of parties nearer of kin. *NURSING NARAIN v. 7. GENERAL HEIRS—continued.

49. ———— Preference of, to bandhus or bhinna gotra-sapindas—Vatan service, Alienability of, beyond lifetime by will—Effect of subsequent change in the tenure rendering it alienable.—The word “samanodakas,” meaning literally those participating in the same oblation of water, includes descendants from a common ancestor not remotely related than the thirteenth degree from the propositus. One P died childless, devising his entire property, including his right to receive annually a certain draigiri cash allowance, to the plaintiff's husband after the death of his (testator's) widow, B A. The testator and the plaintiff's husband were great-grandsons of one K by his son and daughter respectively. The plaintiff's husband having predeceased B A, she made another will in favour of the plaintiff. Subsequently B A died. The plaintiff thereupon brought a suit against the defendants, claiming the aforesaid cash allowance and arrears under these wills and as heir of P. The defendants, who were distant cousins of P, being related to him beyond the thirteenth degree, inter alia contended that the wills were invalid, as P, when he made the will, had only a life-interest in the vatan, which was a service vatan, and that they were nearer heirs to P than the plaintiff, who was a bhinna gotra-sapinda or bandhu of P. Both the lower Courts rejected plaintiff's claim. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court. Held, confirming the decree of the lower Court, that plaintiff's claim should be disallowed. The alienation by will by P of what was then a vatan held for service, being in its inception invalid as against his heirs, did not become valid because of a change in the tenure of the estate after his life-interest had terminated. B A, the widow of P, had nothing more than a widow's estate incapable of alienation beyond her lifetime, and therefore the wills executed by her were invalid. The case was one to be determined by the Hindu law of inheritance. The defendants, though more than thirteen degrees removed from P, were included in the term “samanodakas,” and as such had a claim to the estate of P superior to that of the plaintiff or her deceased husband as his bandhus. *BAI DEVKOR v. (d) SAPINDAS.

51. ———— Definition of sapindas.—The author of the Mitakshara in v. 3, s. 5, Ch. II, uses the word “sapinda” in the sense of “connection by particles of one body,” and not in the sense of “connection by funeral oblations.” In order to determine whether a person is a “sapinda” of the propositus within the meaning of the definition given by the author of the Mitakshara in Acharakanda

52. ——— Sapindas tracing relationship to common ancestor through two females.—The widow of a Hindu having acquired property from her husband, and having died issueless without disposing of it, the plaintiffs claimed, as the heirs of the husband, to recover it from the defendants, who were the brother and sister of the widow. The plaintiffs were found to be the sons of the daughter's daughter of the husband's paternal grandfather. Held that, inasmuch as plaintiffs were sapindas of the deceased husband, it was immaterial that their relationship to the common ancestor should have to be traced through two females. They must therefore be held to be his bandhus and, as such, entitled to succeed to the property left by the widow. VENKATAGIRI v. CHANDRU

66. ———— Share of adopted son where a son is subsequently born—Mitakshara—Vyavahar Mayukha.—In Western India, both in the districts governed by the Mitakshara and those specially under the authority of the Vyavahar Mayukha, the right of the adopted son, where there is a "legitimate son" born after the adoption, extends only to a fifth share of the father's estate. In a suit by an adopted son to recover his share in his adoptive father's estate, a son having been born to the adoptive father subsequently to the plaintiff's adoption, the Court of first instance awarded the plaintiff a fourth share of the property in dispute. The defendant appealed to the District Court, but in appeal raised no question as to the extent of the share awarded to the plaintiff. On second appeal to the High Court it was contended that, in any event, the plaintiff was only entitled to a fifth share. Held that, under the circumstances and having regard to the nature of the question, the point might be taken in second appeal on behalf of the defendant, and the High Court varied the decree by awarding the plaintiff a fifth share instead of a fourth share, but ordered the appellant (defendant) to bear his own costs of the appeal. *GIRIAPA v. In a suit by the brother of N, who was the managing member of his family, to recover the property from the sister of the last holder, Held that, as an illatam can succeed to property in his natural family, his natural relatives can succeed to his property, and as the paternal uncle is preferable as an heir to the sister, the plaintiff was prima facie entitled to recover notwithstanding the admission, and that it was for the defendant to establish

76. ——— Bandhu—Paternal great-aunt's grandson.—According to the Hindu law of succession in force in the Madras Presidency, the grandson of a paternal great-aunt of the deceased inherits to him as a bandhu. SETHURAMA v. PONNAMMAL . . . I. L. R., 12 Mad., 155

77. ——— Sapindas—First cousin's daughter's son—Collateral succession.—The sapinda relationship exists between the daughter's son and the son's son of two first cousins; the former therefore is an heir to the latter. Uma Sunkar Motra v. Kali Kamal Mozumdar, I. L. E., 6 Calc., 256; 1 C. L. R., 145, affirmed on appeal by the Privy Council, I. L. E., 10 Calc., 233; 18 C. L. R., 379; I. E., 10 I. A., 188, and Padmakumari Debi Chowdhurani v. Court of Wards, I. L. E., 8 Calc., 302; I. E., 8 I. A., 229, relied on. MANIK CHAND GOLBOHA v. JAGAT SATTANI PRANKUMARI BIRI . . . I. L. R., 17 Calc., 518

78. ——— Widow of another paternal uncle.—By the Hindu law the sons of a paternal uncle inherit in preference to the widow of another paternal uncle of the propositus. RACHAVA v. KALINGAPA . . . I. L. R., 16 Bom., 716

79. ——— Cousin in third degree.—Held that a cousin in the third degree has no right of inheritance in the presence of cousins in the second degree. MAHABESE PERSHAD v. RAM SURUN . . . 3 Agr., 6

80. ——— Sapindas—Bandhus—Mitakshara law—Descendants in third degree from common ancestor—Second cousins.—The plaintiffs were descended in the third degree from M who was E's maternal great-grandfather, and E was descended in the third degree from M, who was the plaintiff's maternal great-grandfather. Held, with reference to the definition of bandhu and sapinda in the Mitakshara (by which school of Hindu law the parties were governed), that the plaintiffs were E's sapindas through his mother, and E was the plaintiff's sapinda directly; and being thus mutually related as sapindas, the plaintiffs were heritable sapindas and bandhus of E, ex-parte materna, and on his death without issue were entitled to his property as his heirs. BABU LAL v. NANKU RAM . . . I. L. R., 22 Calc., 339

83. ——— Zamindari karnam—Order of succession to hereditary office.—A woman, who had been appointed to succeed her husband, the holder of the hereditary office of karnam in a zamindari, died leaving the defendant, her daughter's son, and the plaintiff, the son of her late husband's paternal uncle. Held that the defendant was entitled to succeed in preference to the plaintiff. Krishnamma v. Papa, 4 Mad., 234, followed. SSETARAMAYYA v. VENKATABAZU
[1 L. R., 18 Mad., 420]

84. ——— Death of widow of last male proprietor.—A daughter's son is on the death of the widow of the last male proprietor a preferable heir to descendants in the third or fourth remove. HIMUNCHULL v. MAHARAJ SINGH
[1 Agr., 210]

BURYAR SINGH v. HUNSER . . . 2 Agr., 166

85. ——— Law at Benares.—Held that, according to Hindu law current at Benares, the daughters' sons inherit in default of qualified daughters; and that, if there be sons of more than one daughter, they take per capita, and not per stirpes. RAM SAWRUTH PANDY v. BASDEO SINGH . . . 2 Agr., 168

86. ——— Succession to cultivator—Distant relation.—Distant relation (such as those who are called distant sapindas and samandakas) of a deceased raiyat is not entitled to succeed by inheritance to the cultivation of a hereditary raiyat. Held, with reference to the above principle, that the son of the daughter is too remote to succeed to the tenure of cultivating occupancy held by his maternal grandfather. RAM SURUN SOKOOL v. SHEKUTUN KOORMER . . . 2 Agr., Pt. II, 166

87. ——— Mother's sisters.—According to Hindu law, a deceased daughter's son has no right of inheritance to the estate of his maternal grandfather during the life of any of his mother's sisters. KAMDAN v. BEHABEN LALL

88. ————— Mitakshara law.
—According to Mitakshara law, a daughter's son takes his maternal grandfather's estate as full proprietor, and on his death such estate devolves on his heirs, and not on the heirs of his maternal grandfather. His g. traia sapindas, or the persons related to him through his father, have therefore preferential right to succeed him if the person related to him through his mother. Sista v. Badri Prasad [I. L. R., 3 All., 134]

89. ————— Adopted son of daughter—Brothers.—According to Hindu law, a person cannot succeed as the adopted son of a daughter who has brothers alive, and who cannot be an appointed daughter if she had brothers when she married. Nor can he succeed as claiming under a bought son. Yachareddy Chinna Bassavapa v. Yachareddy Gowdapa. 5 W. R., P. C., 114

90. ————— Great-grandson.
—A daughter's son does not inherit where there is a great-grandson of the deceased alive. Gooroo Gobindo Chowdhry v. Hurse Madhus Roy [Marsh., 338; 2 Hay, 401]

91. ————— Estate of maternal grandfather—Daughter.—A suit brought against K, the widow of K, a Hindu, by the representatives of K's brothers, H and P, for possession of his estate, ended in a compromise by which the defendant recognized the plaintiffs' rights, and conceded that the family was joint. After K's death, M, a daughter of K, brought a suit on her own behalf against the above-mentioned plaintiffs for possession of her father's estate, but afterwards withdrew her claim. Subsequently S, M's son, who had been born after K's compromise, brought a suit against M and the representatives of H and P, to recover possession of the estate, on the allegation that, the family being a divided one, he was entitled, under the Hindu law, to succeed to such estate, and that both the compromise entered into by K and the withdrawal of the former suit by M were in fraud of his succession, and did not affect his rights. The Court of first instance found that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed to the estate, but that, his mother being still alive, he was entitled to possession after her death only, and upon these findings gave him a decree declaring his right to possession on M's death. The lower Appellate Court reversed the decree, holding that the compromise entered into by K was conclusive against the plaintiff's claim, and also that, during his mother's lifetime, he had no locus standi to maintain the suit. Per Mahmood, J., that the plaintiff's rights as a daughter's son (which were not affected by his birth having taken place after his maternal grandfather's death) did not entitle him, under ordinary circumstances, to succeed to his maternal grandfather's estate in a divided Hindu family during the existence of a daughter, whether she were his own mother or his maternal aunt; and that the claim for possession was therefore rightly dismissed. Amritlal Bose v. Rajonankant Mitter, 15 B. L. R., 10; Sista v. Badri

92. ————— Estate of sonless Hindu.—In the case of a sonless Hindu, his separate estate devolves, in the first instance, upon his widow or widows, and thereafter upon the daughter or daughters, and it is not till the death of the daughter that the daughter's son's right of inheritance initiates; and the death of a daughter's son antecedent to the death of a daughter would prevent the estate from devolving upon the son of such daughter's son. Dharup Nath v. Gobind Saran. Gobind Saran v. Dharup Nath [I. L. R., 3 All., 614]

93. ————— Father—Law in Gujarat—Mother.—In Gujarat the right of succession to the estate of a Hindu who is separate in interest, and who, at his death, leaves a father and mother, but no issue or widow, devolves upon the father, in preference to the mother. Khodabhai Mahli v. Bahadur Dala [I. L. R., 6 Bom., 641]

94. ————— Father's brother's daughter's son.—A father's brother's daughter's son cannot inherit according to Hindu law. Gobindo Hureekar v. Womesh Chunder Roy [W. R., F. B., 176]

95. ————— Sapinda.—A father's brother's daughter's son is entitled to be recognized as an heir according to the Hindu law current in the Bengal school. Guru Gobind Shaha Mandal v. Anand Lal Ghose Mazumdar [5 B. L. R., F. B., 15; 13 W. R., F. B., 49]

96. ————— Whether preferential heir to mother's brother's son.—Under the Bengal School of Hindu law, the father's brother's daughter's son as heir is preferential to the mother's brother's son. Bajaj Lal Sen v. Jiban Kalsinha Roy. I. L. R., 26 Cal., 236

97. ————— Spiritual benefit—Father's father's brother's son.—The father's father's brother's son of a deceased person stands nearer to him in right of succession than his father's brother's daughter's son; the former is therefore preferentially entitled, on the death of the deceased person's widow, to a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860, enabling him to collect the debts due to the estate. Gopal Chunder Nath Coondoo v. Haridas Chini. I. L. R., 11 Cal., 343

98. ————— Father's sister's son—Great-grandson of great-great-great-grandfather.—A father's sister's son does not inherit when opposed to the great-grandson of the great-great-great-grandfather of the deceased. Jibnath Singh v. Court of Wards. 5 B. L. R., 449; 14 W. R., 117

[6 W. R., 158]

103. ——— Law in Madras Presidency—Paternal uncle's son.—According to the Hindu law of succession current in the Madras Presidency, a paternal uncle's son succeeds to the inheritance before a brother's grandson. SURAYA v. LAKSHMINARASAMMA. I. L. R., 5 Mad., 291

104. ——— Grandson of maternal grandfather's brother.—According to Hindu law, the grandson of a brother of a grandfather of the deceased is heir to his property in default of nearer heirs. BEAJA KISHOR MITTER MOZUMDAR v. RADHA GOBIND DUTT
[3 B. L. R., A. C., 435; 12 W. R., 339]

105. ——— Grandson of sister—Maternal uncle's son—Right to sue as reversioner.—The plaintiff sued as the nearest reversionary heir of one V, deceased, to obtain a declaration that certain alienations made by the widow (who was defendant No. 1) in favour of defendant No. 2 were not binding on the reversion. Defendant No. 3 was the son of V's sister's son, and was joined in the suit, because he claimed to be a nearer heir than the plaintiff, who was the son of V's maternal uncle. Held that both the plaintiff and defendant No. 3 were athma bandhus of the deceased, but defendant No. 3 was the nearer reversionary heir. BALUSAMI PANDITHAS v. VARAYANA RAU. I. L. R., 20 Mad., 342

106. ——— Grandsons of daughter of alienor's deceased husband—Bandhus—Reversioners.—Held, in a suit to set aside an alienation made by a Hindu widow of property which had been of her deceased husband in his lifetime, that the sons of the son of a daughter of the alienor's late husband were, their father and grandmother being dead, reversioners and, as such, entitled to sue to set aside the alienation made by the widow. *Krishnayya v.
